As Labour's paymasters threaten more strikes, Starmer is accused of treating the taxpayer like a cash machine

£14bn BILL FOR KEIR'S 'SHABBY' UNION CAVE-IN

EXCLUSIVE

By Anna Mikhailova

DEPUTY POLITICAL EDITOR

KEIR Starmer's capitulation to his union paymasters' wage demands will leave Britain with a £14billion bill – much of it met by taxpayers.

Chancellor Rachel Reeves had planned to set aside £10billion for public sector pay rises.

But devastating analysis – seen by The Mail on Sunday – reveals how looming increases for GPs, nurses, teachers and other workers could see the total bill soar by another 40 per cent.

Last night critics accused the Prime Minister of treating taxpayers 'as cash machines' to fund the rises. They also raised further questions over whether Sir Keir is losing control of the unions after the 'shabby' deals less than two months into his premiership.

The bombshell report comes just a day after Aslef rail barons announced a wave of fresh walkouts – 48 hours after being offered a bumper increase.

It sets Britons up for another autumn of misery with
