BRITAIN'S FIRST FAT JAB DEATH

NHS nurse who bought 'King Kong' of slimming drugs from online pharmacy dies after taking just two doses

By Chris Pollard
and Krissy Storrar

AN NHS nurse has become the first person in Britain whose death is directly linked to a weight-loss jab.

Susan McGowan, 58, suffered multiple organ failure, septic shock and pancreatitis after taking two low-dose injections of tirzepatide, known by its brand name Mounjaro.

She bought the powerful drug – which is dubbed the 'King Kong' of slimming jabs and was recently approved for use on the NHS – from an online pharmacy.

Last night, experts called for tighter restrictions on how Mounjaro, Ozempic, Wegovy and other weight-loss injections are prescribed – including a requirement that patients are seen in person by a doctor.

Days after her second dose of Mounjaro, Ms McGowan began suffering severe stomach pains and sickness.

She went to A&E at University Hospital Monklands in Airdrie, where she had
