Ex-PM takes fight to Labour with rousing intervention...

BORIS: BRITAIN CAN STILL SWERVE STARMERGEDDON

BRITAIN can still dodge a bullet and avert 'Starmergeddon', Boris Johnson tells voters today.

In an impassioned plea to stop the country lurching to a 'socialist supremacy', the former prime minister says it would be a 'huge mistake' to let Labour leader Sir Keir Starmer into No 10.

Writing exclusively for the Mail, Mr Johnson makes his biggest intervention in the campaign, insisting that there is still time between now and polling day on Thursday for the nation to 'collectively come to our senses'.

He says nothing is certain, despite polls suggesting the Tories are on course for an electoral wipeout, giving Sir Keir a 200-seat supermajority. The predictions have brought Conservative warnings of Labour being handed unfettered power, with a diminished Tory party unable to muster an effective opposition.

Such a scenario would give Sir Keir a 'blank cheque' to increase taxes, it is feared. In a bid to turn the tide, and remind voters what is at stake,
