will 'never shut its eyes to the threats our country faces'.

In a major shift from the Jeremy Corbyn years, he says Labour is now 'utterly committed to our nation's defences'. Sir Keir describes his belief in Nato and the UK's nuclear deterrent as 'unshakeable' – and says national security always comes first under his leadership.

He will today become the first Labour leader in three decades to visit the Barrow-in-Furness shipyard where the next generation of ballistic
