With worklessness at 12-year high...

STARMER TOLD: GET A GRIP OF WORKSHY BRITAIN

LABOUR was under pressure last night to tackle the worklessness crisis – with 9.4million adults neither in a job nor looking for one.

This represents more than a fifth of the working-age population and includes a near-record figure for those signed off with long-term sickness.

It is a major headache for Chancellor Rachel Reeves because employers cannot find the staff they need – making it harder for the economy to grow.

Ms Reeves yesterday pledged to take action in her autumn Budget, declaring ‘if you can work, you should work’. But last night the Tories said Labour’s workers’
