

BRYONY GORDON

My two hours with Biden's crack addict son that left me feeling like a nun

PAGE 35

JAN MOIR

Wes Streeting and his tweet saying he wanted to push me under a train

PAGES 26-27

WHAT IS LABOUR NOT TELLING US ABOUT TAX HIKES?

After a manifesto big on windy promises and small on detail, even Left-wing think-tank warns of 'a parliament of tax rises'

By Jason Groves
and Claire Ellicott

BRITAIN was last night warned to brace for a 'parliament of tax rises' if Labour wins the election.

Sir Keir Starmer opened a £25 billion tax divide with the Conservatives yesterday as he published Labour's manifesto for power.

But experts warned that Sir Keir would have to raise taxes even higher unless he is willing to impose deep spending cuts or break the party's own fiscal rules.

Labour's blueprint confirms plans for £8.5 billion in tax rises, which would take the UK's overall tax burden to its highest level in history. The plan contrasts sharply with the £17 billion of tax cuts offered by Rishi Sunak in his manifesto.

Last night deputy leader Angela Rayner stopped short of ruling out raising capital

Turn to Page 2

Why I've decided to get Botox... aged 26

Inside
our soul baring new section
Secrets & Lives