Ed Miliband forced to admit his 'clean power' revolution may NOT cut costs for families for years — despite election pledges

LABOUR'S £300 GREEN ENERGY BILL SAVING 'LIE'

LABOUR'S pledge to slash £300 off energy bills was branded 'a lie' last night.

The Tories went on the attack over the flagship promise after Ed Miliband admitted his 'clean power' revolution may not cut bills at all before the next election.

During the election campaign, Sir Keir Starmer, Energy Secretary Mr Miliband and other leading figures repeatedly claimed that their controversial plan to decarbonise the electricity system by 2030 would reduce household bills by £300.

In a speech last month, Sir Keir said Labour would 'tackle the root causes of the cost of living crisis and help families save up to £300 off their energy bills'.

Steve Reed, now the Environment Secretary, said the plans would 'cut bills by an average of £300 a year every year'.

But Downing Street refused to repeat the pledge yesterday. And Mr Miliband admitted that his radical plans could take years to deliver.

To add to the confusion, Sir Keir later appeared to confirm the figure, saying he stood by his manifesto pledges. But
