TORIES IN TURMOIL

After day of grandstanding from BOTH wings of the Tory party, Rishi faces Rwanda vote today that could sink his leadership. And just about the only thing his MPs agree on? It's going...

DOWN TO THE WIRE

RISHI Sunak was last night battling to prevent a revolt on the Tory Right from derailing the Rwanda scheme and potentially his government.

The Prime Minister will hold last-ditch talks with rebel MPs this morning aimed at heading off defeat when the Commons votes tonight on his legislation, designed to finally get deportation flights off the ground.

One senior Tory said the vote was 'looking tight'. At one point yesterday, Conservative whips considered the drastic move of pulling the vote to avoid a potential defeat.

MPs were even warned that should the legislation fail, it could trigger the collapse of the Government. 'Some of the rebels are sitting on big majorities and maybe don't care, but others are not in that position,' one source said.

'They should think very carefully about what the consequences
