Boris's dramatic plan for military raid on Holland to snatch back our vaccines

BORIS Johnson hatched a plan for British Special Forces to 'invade' Holland and seize vaccines during the pandemic.

In Unleashed, his sensational new memoir, the former prime minister reveals how he asked senior members of the Armed Forces to devise an operation to liberate five million doses of the AstraZeneca vaccine which had been 'kidnapped' by the European Union and stored in a warehouse in Leiden.

By Glen Owen

Mr Johnson was told that forces could cross the Channel clandestinely and navigate up Dutch canals – but he was eventually persuaded that mounting an attack on a long-standing Nato ally would be 'nuts'.

The book, which covers Mr Johnson's tumultuous years in politics and is being serialised exclusively in the Daily Mail and Mail on Sunday, includes the run-up to the Brexit referendum and how the fallout from that political earthquake led to the Tory party being engulfed by civil war. It also offers incredible details of his
