After TV presenter sparked debate by revealing 15-year-old went travelling abroad with friend...

KIRSTIE'S FURY AS SOCIAL SERVICES PROBE HER SON'S INTERRAIL TRIP

KIRSTIE ALLSOPP last night spoke of her outrage after she was quizzed by social services for allowing her 15-year-old son to go Interrailing across Europe.

The Mail on Sunday can reveal how, in an extraordinary intervention, a social worker contacted the TV presenter to inform her that a file had been opened after child protection concerns were raised over her youngest child, Oscar.

To the 52-year-old's fury, the social worker demanded to know what 'safeguards' had been put in place when she allowed Oscar to travel for three weeks on the continent alongside a 16-year-old friend. Astonishingly, she was told that the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea (RBKC), her local council, could keep the file open 'in case there was another referral and we needed to come to your house and look into this further'.

Speaking exclusively to this newspaper, Ms Allsopp branded the council's actions 'Orwellian'

King 'open to Harry truce after spiritual guidance'

By Sarah Robertson

KING Charles has received advice from faith leaders that has led him to contemplate repairing his relationship with Prince Harry, The Mail on Sunday has learned.

The monarch has taken 'spiritual nourishment' from his discussions with religious leaders and is now more open to the idea of a rapprochement with his son, according to a well-placed source.

Healing the rift would require the King to put aside his anger over Harry's deeply wounding public comments. Charles is saddened by the separation, which has meant he has not seen his grandchildren Archie and Lilibet since June 2022.

The source said: 'Harry will always be Charles's much-loved son. He has faith that Harry could return... The door will always remain open to him and his family. He does not want years of discord and disharmony clouding his reign.'
