PALACE CALLS IN LAWYERS OVER BOGUS A.I. BOOKS ON KING'S CANCER

BUCKINGHAM Palace last night reacted angrily to the sale of despicable fake books about the King's cancer diagnosis – purportedly written by real authors but actually created by artificial intelligence.

In an unprecedented statement, the Palace lambasted the sale of the 'intrusive' and 'insensitive' books making false claims about the King's health – and added that its lawyers are looking into the issue. The condemnation came after an investigation by this newspaper uncovered seven sham biographies being sold by Amazon that falsely claim to share exclusive revelations about the King.

Though written by computer, they have been given human authors' names and appear on the site alongside legitimate biographies. The tech giant, founded by billionaire Jeff Bezos, takes up to 65 per cent of the sale price. The volumes, which
