POLICE GIVE UP ON FOUR CRIMES A MINUTE

Outrage at rising tally of rapists, violent thugs and burglars who evade the law

POLICE abandon investigations into four crimes every minute without tracking down the culprits.

The number of inquiries closed by officers without identifying a suspect has rocketed by nearly 250,000 year-on-year.

Forces gave up on investigations into 2,306,623 reported crimes in the year to June, including hundreds of thousands of violent offences and burglaries. The official Home Office figures are equivalent to more than 6,300 every day on average, or one every 14 seconds.

They prompted serious questions about whether the taxpayer is getting value for money for the multi-billion-pound sums injected into policing by the Government.
