STURGEON HUSBAND CHARGED OVER SNP CASH PROBE

He's accused of embezzling party funds

NICOLA Sturgeon's husband was charged last night over the alleged embezzlement of SNP funds.

Peter Murrell, 59, was re-arrested yesterday more than a year after he was first questioned as part of a probe into the party's finances. The former SNP chief executive spent more than nine hours in a police station before being charged and bailed.

The charge is the latest twist in Operation Branchform, the long-running investigation into how more than £600,000 of 'ring-fenced' donations for a second independence referendum were spent.

Colin Beattie, the party's former treasurer, and ex-leader Ms Sturgeon were also arrested last year as part of the inquiry.

Both were released by police without charge pending further
