

I was born via a surrogate.
Now I believe surrogate
births should be banned

FEMAIL MAGAZINE STARTS
PAGE 29

£75,000 DEAL SPARKS NEW BATTLE WITH POST OFFICE VICTIMS

Sunak changes law to quash convictions, but row looms over 'out of touch' offer for those not charged – but whose lives were destroyed

By Jason Groves
and Chris Pollard

HUNDREDS of postmasters face a lengthy battle for compensation – despite landmark legislation that will clear their names.

In a move which cheered campaigners, Rishi Sunak yesterday said emergency legislation would be used to overturn convictions against more than 900 postmasters who were wrongly accused of stealing from the Post Office.

The unprecedented step came amid growing public anger at the plight of branch managers who were convicted after faulty Fujitsu accounting software Horizon made it look like money was missing from their shops.

But some postmasters said their battle will go on after the Government made an initial offer of just £75,000 compensation to those who were hounded by the Post Office – and had to pay back cash – but who were never convicted of any offence.

Mr Sunak described the Post Office scandal as 'one of the greatest miscarriages of justice in our nation's history',

Turn to Page 6

Troubled: Friends star Matthew Perry

EXCLUSIVE

Matthew Perry
'hurled
a coffee table at ex-fiancee'

SEE PAGE 5

Claims: His ex-fiancee Molly Hurwitz