a £38.5 billion 'black hole' in Sir Keir Starmer's sums.

Mr Hunt said it gave the lie to Labour's claim that its plans were 'fully costed and fully funded'.

'The gap between what they will spend and what they will raise, according to independent official costings, is £38 billion – or £2,100 per working household,' the Chancellor added. 'Keir Starmer's first step will not be the motherhood and apple pie we heard yesterday, but to help himself to you and your family's wallets.'

Mr Hunt said tax was set to be the 'biggest divide' at the election, with an 'ocean of deep blue
