HARRY and Meghan were 'downgraded' on the official Buckingham Palace website last night.

Despite acrimoniously stepping down as senior working royals in January 2020, full and separate profiles of the Duke and Duchess of Sussex had remained up alongside the rest of the Royal Family until yesterday morning.

Last night those pictures and biographies briefly vanished.

Within half an hour they were replaced with a significantly smaller, joint biography at the very bottom of the page – below the Duke of York. The Sussexes' entry now reads that they have stepped back as working royals, with just a couple of short paragraphs on each of them.

Despite growing public anger at their continued inclusion, the Palace has always side-stepped questions about why their details remained online despite the couple quitting royal duties four years
