

All of your club's games
on one side...
Week-by-week fixtures on the other

FREE INSIDE
Giant glossy Premier League
fixtures poster

'Incandescent' bosses accuse Edwards of taking salary in 'bad faith'

BBC TELLS 'VILLAIN' HUW: HAND BACK £200,000 OF PAY

By Andy Jehring
and Alison Boshoff

DISGRACED Huw Edwards was yesterday urged to hand back the £200,000 salary he was paid after his arrest.

BBC bosses branded the newsreader a 'villain' for taking the licence fee money 'in bad faith' before pleading guilty to child pornography charges.

Corporation chiefs are said to be 'incandescent with rage' at the presenter for not immediately coming clean.

But questions remain over why they did not freeze his near £500,000 salary when he was detained in November.

Experts warn there is now little legal recourse to reclaim the money from the veteran presenter, who broke the news of the late Queen's death to the nation.

Yesterday the BBC board announced it was asking Edwards, 62, to hand back the money he was paid in the five months before his resignation in April.

Last week he admitted making 41 indecent images of children – with a number being of the most serious category, showing

Turn to Page 6

Speaking out: Graziano Di Prima and wife Giada

SHOWBIZ EXCLUSIVE

Strictly's
Graziano:
I am NOT a monster

PAGES 10-11