

ICE transferred detainees between facilities 308,800 times this year

From January through July, ICE held and transferred more than 180,000 migrants across more than 600 facilities. The facilities most used in this system are in Arizona, Texas, Louisiana and Florida.

Echoes of Red Scare in Trump memo

White House rejects claims that ‘domestic terrorism’ campaign is a front for vengeance.

By KEVIN RECTOR

At a tense political moment in the wake of conservative lightning rod Charlie Kirk’s killing, President Trump signed a presidential memorandum focusing federal law enforcement on disrupting “domestic terrorism.”

The memo appeared to focus on political violence. But during a White House signing Thursday, the president and his top advisors repeatedly hinted at a much broader campaign of suppression against the American left, referencing as problematic both the simple printing of protest signs and the prominent racial justice movement Black Lives Matter.

“We’re looking at the funders of a lot of these groups. You know, when you see the signs and they’re all beautiful signs made professionally, these aren’t your protesters that make the sign in their basement late in the evening because they really believe it. These are anarchists and agitators,” Trump said.

“Whether it be going back to the riots that started with Black Lives Matter and all the way through to the antifa riots, the attacks on ICE officers, the doxxing campaigns and now the political assassinations — these are not lone, isolated events,” said Stephen Miller, the White House deputy chief of staff. “This is part of an organized campaign of radical left terrorism.”

Neither Trump nor Miller nor the other top administration officials flanking them — including Vice President JD Vance, Atty. Gen. Pam Bondi and FBI Director Kash Patel — offered any evidence of such a widespread left-wing terrorism campaign, or many details about how the memo would be put into action.

Law enforcement officials have said Kirk’s alleged shooter appears to have acted alone, and data on domestic extremism more broadly — including some recently scrubbed from the Justice Department’s website — suggest right-wing extremists represent the larger threat.

Many on the right cheered Trump’s memo — just as many on the left cheered calls by Democrats for a clampdown on right-wing extremism during the Biden administration, particularly in light of the violent Jan. 6, 2021, attack on the U.S. Capitol by Trump supporters. In that incident, more than 1,500 were criminally charged, many convicted of assaulting police officers and some for sedition, before Trump pardoned [See Memo, A7]

ICE keeps its detainees on the move

Before being deported, immigrants often are bounced all over the country

By Gabrielle LaMarr LeMee

At 3:25 in the morning of July 24, Milagro Solis Portillo was woken up and booked out of B-18, ICE’s basement detention facility in the downtown L.A. courthouse. She was not told where she was headed as she was put onto a commercial flight along with two immigration officer escorts. A few hours later, she was booked into the Clark County Jail in Jefferson, Ind.

Ming Tanigawa-Lau, an attorney at Immigrant Defenders Law Center who represented Portillo, said her transfer was retaliatory, especially when there was open space at nearby facilities. The 36-year-old’s encounters with ICE had caused a local stir. She suffered a medical incident during her arrest outside her home in Sherman Oaks that required treatment at Glendale Memorial Hospital.

While at the hospital, she was monitored constantly by immigration officers. Local activists and representatives held events protesting her treatment. After two weeks, ICE forcibly removed her from the hospital against the advice of her medical team and sent her to B-18 and then across the country. Portillo isn’t the only detained immigrant flown across the country. The Times analyzed ICE data obtained through the Freedom of Information Act by the Deportation Data Project and found that transfers between facilities in the first half of this year are happening faster and more frequently compared with the same period last year. The typical detainee is transferred at least once. [See Detainees, A10]

CAL STATE SCHOOLS TARGET OF PROBE

Trump administration launches investigation into allegations of antisemitism.

By CLARA HARTER AND JAWEED KALEEM

The Trump administration has launched an investigation into allegations of antisemitism across all 22 campuses of the California State University system, prompting concerns about the chilling of free speech on campus and the violation of staff members’ privacy.

In an email to the CSU community Friday afternoon, Chancellor Mildred Garcia wrote that the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission had initiated a systemwide antisemitism complaint and was reaching out to faculty and staff directly to discuss their experiences on campus.

The administration at Cal State L.A. said Friday that the EEOC has subpoenaed the university to turn over the personal phone numbers and email addresses of all employees. Demonstrators had erected a pro-Palestinian encampment at the university in spring 2024, during a wave of campus protests against Israel’s war in Gaza after the Oct. 7, 2023, Hamas attack on Israel.

The new CSU probes leave no public university in California untouched by antisemitism investigations under the Trump administration. The EEOC is also working with the Department of Justice to investigate allegations of anti- [See CSU, A7]

She was dealt a true scam’s kiss from AI

Abigail Ruvalcaba was intrigued when a handsome daytime soap opera actor she’d been watching for years reached out to her in a Facebook message.

His rugged exterior softened by his piercing blue eyes and an almost shy smile disarmed her. She answered him, pushing away any doubts as to why the Emmy winner would suddenly contact her.

They talked on the phone. He sent her videos professing his love for her. They made plans to buy a beach house so they could start their lives together.

A celebrity deepfake swindle cost a 66-year-old woman everything. She’s not the only one being targeted.

By Hannah Fry

The problem was she was making plans not with “General Hospital” star Steve Burton, but with a scammer who intended not to romance her, but to swindle her. In the end, the scheme led Ruvalcaba to sell her home to send money to the swindlers.

Fraudsters using promises of love and companionship to cheat the lonely is a crime as old as Victorian novels.

But the rapidly advancing world of artificial intelligence and deepfakes has given scammers powerful new weapons. And increasingly, they are us- [See Deepfake, A12]

U.S. weighs private use of Pendleton land

Pentagon considers making part of coastal base available for development or lease.

By HANNAH FRY

In the sweeping Southern California metropolis spanning from Santa Barbara to the Mexico border, Camp Pendleton has long remained the largest undeveloped stretch of the coastline.

The 17 miles of beach and coastal hills has, since World

ALLEN J. SCHABEN Los Angeles Times

DETAILS about the sites on Camp Pendleton being considered for commercial lease remain unclear.

War II, proved crucial in preparing soldiers for amphibious missions. The bluffs, canyons and mountainous terrain that constitute the interior of the base have been fertile training ground for those sent to conflicts in the Middle East and beyond.

But change may be on the horizon.

The United States Department of Defense is considering making a portion of the 125,000-acre base in northwestern San Diego County available for development or lease in what, if successful, would be unprec- [See Pendleton, A9]

A delivery robot’s crash with a disabled man sparks controversy

By CLARA HARTER

A Southern California man with cerebral palsy used his iPhone to record his frustration as a delivery robot continuously swerved into the path of his mobility scooter before suddenly braking, resulting in a bot-on-chair collision. He had no clue the explosive impact the video would have.

Mark Chaney, a disability advocate, said he shared the video of the Sept. 12 collision in West Hollywood to raise awareness about challenges faced by people with disabilities and hold the company accountable for the robot’s behavior.

Less than two weeks later, it has received more than 26 million views on TikTok and Instagram combined, generating fierce backlash against the company that created the bot as well as hateful attacks against Chaney.

Serve Robotics has drawn criticism for the behavior of the robot and the [See Robot, A9]

Trump will order troops to Portland

President says he’s “authorizing Full Force” to handle what he calls “domestic terrorists.” NATION, A6

Kirk Gibson steps up again

He opens a center for those with Parkinson’s disease, Bill Plaschke writes. SPORTS, D1

Weather Clearing. L.A. Basin: 79/64. B10

Opinion Voices A16
Obituaries B5

U.S. attorney fired over order

She says she was let go after warning border official about court injunction. CALIFORNIA, B1

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

