

The Washington Post

Prices may vary in areas outside metropolitan Washington.

SU V1 V2 V3 V4

Partly sunny, windy 61/28 • Tomorrow: Sunny, breezy 41/27 B6

Democracy Dies in Darkness

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 2025 • $4

IRS signals it may give up migrant addresses

After an initial rebuff, tax agency's new chief looks at complying with DHS

BY JACOB BOGAGE,
JEFF STEIN,
MARIA SACCHETTI
AND LISA REIN

Internal Revenue Service leaders rejected a recent request from immigration enforcement officials to divulge the home addresses of 700,000 people suspected of being in the country illegally, rebuffing a Trump administration attempt to leverage the tax service to assist a sweeping immigration crackdown.

In a memo obtained by The Washington Post, Department of Homeland Security authorities asked the IRS on Thursday to connect the names of potentially undocumented immigrants with the people's last known addresses, phone numbers and email addresses.

It follows a DHS request roughly two weeks ago that would allow immigration officials to provide a list of names to the IRS in hopes of obtaining

SEE IRS ON A5

Virginia: Governor orders police and prison officials to help ICE. B1

U.S. eyes at least 1 million for fast-track deportation

BY NICK MIROFF
AND MARIA SACCHETTI

The Trump administration has directed federal officers to identify immigrants who can be rapidly removed from the United States without a court hearing as part of its quest to boost deportations, according to an internal memorandum viewed by The Washington Post.

The memo circulated at U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement on Feb. 18 details the agency's latest strategy to accelerate removals and identifies their potential targets. More than 1 million migrants who were admitted to the United States through an array of initiatives during President Joe Biden's administration could be flagged for "expedited removal" proceedings, though officials have instructed immigration officers to pore over the nearly 8 million deportation cases on their dockets to find more.

Migrants could be speedily deported if they crossed the border

SEE ICE ON A4

"You've allowed yourself to be in a very bad position. You don't have the cards right now."

President Trump

"I'm not playing cards. I'm very serious, Mr. President."

President Zelensky

PHOTOS BY JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky and U.S. President Donald Trump were expected to finalize a deal on access to Ukraine's natural resources, but the acrimonious meeting ended without signatures.

Fury boils over in Oval Office, shocking globe

ZELENSKY BOOTED AFTER HEATED EXCHANGE

Support for Ukraine at risk as Trump delivers lashing

BY MICHAEL BIRNBAUM
AND MATT VISER

President Donald Trump ripped into Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky in the Oval Office on Friday, demanding respect and gratitude from the wartime leader in a blistering encounter that could determine whether Europe's future is war or peace.

The heated back-and-forth — with Trump, Zelensky and Vice President JD Vance at times talking over each other — was a striking breach of Oval Office comity, where even tough exchanges have typically happened with calm voices and diplomatic language.

Not Friday, when Trump told Zelensky that he had no cards and was in no position to make requests of the United States. He also suggested that talks could derail unless attitudes changed. The on-camera fury had no modern precedent and was all the more striking at a time when Trump has been more sympathetic to Moscow than to Kyiv after generations in which Washington has stood staunchly against Kremlin aggression across the world.

Zelensky traveled from Kyiv to finalize a deal granting the United States limited access to Ukraine's natural resources, which the smaller country had hoped would make the United States more open to bolstering its security in the war with Russia. Instead, the meeting ended without signatures, as Trump booted Zelensky from the White House and issued what appeared to be a threat to cut off U.S. aid for Ukraine entirely.

The turn of events was surprising given the optimism that both sides had projected going into a meeting that was designed to showcase a renewed relationship between Zelensky and Trump. The rapid deterioration revealed just how much tension continues to simmer between the two leaders, and it stunned policymakers on both sides of the Atlantic. One senior European diplomat described feeling nauseated watching the encounter.

"You've allowed yourself to be

SEE ZELENSKY ON A7

Confrontation muddies prospects for peace deal

BY KAREN DEYOUNG,
MISSY RYAN
AND JOHN HUDSON

As reaction to the Trump-Zelensky meltdown in the Oval Office on Friday turned from astonishment to concern about what happens next, there was little consensus on whether a U.S.-negotiated peace deal to end the Russia-Ukraine war remains possible.

"He can come back when he is ready for Peace," President Donald Trump said on social media after his fiery meeting with his Ukrainian counterpart. The agreement he had prepared for President Volodymyr Zelensky, giving the United States rights to exploit Ukraine's critical minerals in exchange for a vaguely outlined U.S. security guarantee, remained unsigned.

While Zelensky tried to get Trump to be more specific about how he would ensure that Russia would not again violate a ceasefire, Trump downplayed the importance of security, saying it amounted to "2 percent" of any deal that stopped the fighting. "I'm not worried about security," Trump said. "I'm worried about getting the deal done."

Top Trump national security officials rushed to congratulate him for putting Zelensky in his place. "As the President has ALWAYS done—he stood for America ... America First. The world saw it today in real time," Keith Kellogg, Trump's special envoy for Ukraine and Russia, posted on X.

Vice President JD Vance, leaning forward on the sofa as the two presidents sat in armchairs before the fireplace, essentially called Zelensky an ingrate and badgered the Ukrainian president to say "thank you" to Trump.

Shocked European leaders, who have tried to stroke Trump's ego while gently nudging him toward ongoing support for Ukraine, largely confined themselves to saying they stood with Zelensky.

"It's too fresh to give a serious and considered opinion on it," a European diplomat said of the Oval Office meeting. "It shifts the tone, but the fundamentals of why

SEE UKRAINE ON A7

U.S.-Russia thaw: Better bilateral ties now, a reopened Ikea next? A6

Solidarity: European leaders rally around a shocked Kyiv. A9

DOGE targets agency antibias offices

BY JULIAN MARK,
HANNAH NATANSON
AND DANIELLE ABRIL

Agencies across the federal government are dismantling offices that enforce civil rights and anti-discrimination laws under a Trump administration push to shrink the workforce, weakening the government's ability to deliver on legal obligations to protect workers' rights.

The Social Security Administration this week announced it was closing its Office of Civil

Secret documents spell out plan to gut federal equal opportunity staffs

Rights and Equal Opportunity, where about 150 people worked investigating civil rights complaints, preventing harassment and ensuring accommodations for people with disabilities, according to two people familiar with the matter who spoke on the condition of anonymity for fear of retaliation.

Leaders at the Labor Department are planning to cut by 90 percent the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, which for decades has worked to ensure that government contractors took affirmative action to end discrimination at their firms, documents obtained by The Washington Post show. The Federal Trade

SEE DOGE ON A4

Demoted: Seven at U.S. attorney's office in D.C. are reassigned. B1

Barbs cut deep in Oklahoma City

BY DANIELLE PAQUETTE

OKLAHOMA CITY — He'd served 24 years in the Army, completing combat tours in Iraq and Syria. Now he solved military tech problems from a civilian Defense Department cubicle in Oklahoma.

"He firmly believes in the mission," his last performance review noted, "to serve the warfighter."

Still, Alan refreshed his email inbox, wondering: Am I about to get sacked?

As the U.S. DOGE Service purged thousands of federal work-

With federal staffers cast as villains, 1995 bombing lingers in local memories

ers nationwide, the cybersecurity specialist at Tinker Air Force Base hurried to save copies of his government employment records. It seemed darkly absurd that he'd risked his life for this country, he thought, only to worry that some teenage Elon Musk surrogate might delete his training certificates while dumping him. Colleagues who'd been let go, he'd heard, were locked out of documents they needed for a job search.

"They're treating us," he said, "like the bad guys."

He'd felt villainized enough when President Donald Trump derided those slated for firing as "the deep state," "corrupt, incompetent

SEE OKLAHOMA CITY ON A11

Weekly emails: This time, federal workers may have to respond. A12

IN THE NEWS

New battlefield rules The Pentagon relaxed restrictions on how commanders approve airstrikes and raids, allowing for faster responses to perceived threats. A3

Leaving VMI The state military college's board declined to renew the contract of the school's first Black superintendent. B1

THE NATION No "bombshells" were found after the eagerly awaited release of Jeffrey Epstein case files. A2 A majority-Black town formed armed citizen patrols after being targeted by neo-Nazis. A3

THE WORLD The Biden administration declined to halt aid to Israeli military units over abuse reports. A8 As Pope Francis marked two weeks in the hospital, retirement speculation swirled. A9

THE ECONOMY The FAA will increase the pay of air traffic trainees in a bid to address a shortage of controllers. A10 Through boycotts and "buycotts," consumers are wielding their wallets in support of diversity, equity and inclusion. A12

THE REGION Maryland House lawmakers stripped funding cuts from an education bill proposed by Gov. Wes Moore. B1 FBI agents questioned Environmental Protection Agency employees about a Biden grant program for clean-energy projects. B1

OBITUARIES Boris Spassky, 88, was a symbol of Cold War rivalry and a foil to Bobby Fischer in chess's "Match of the Century." B4

SPORTS Rising D.C. United star Hosi Kijima took a chance by moving to a Florida boarding school from Japan at 12. D1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A10
COMICS.....C5
OBITUARIES.....B4
OPINION PAGES.....A13
TELEVISION.....C4
WORLD NEWS.....A6

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54142

