

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

THURSDAY, JULY 24, 2025

‘Nothing in the files warranted further investigation or prosecution.’

ATTORNEY GENERAL PAM BONDI AND DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL TODD BLANCHE

AG told Trump his name is in Epstein files

Revelation comes as administration seeks to quiet furor over silence on issue

By Maggie Haberman and Glenn Thrush
NEW YORK TIMES

Attorney General Pam Bondi informed President Trump in the spring that his name appeared in the Jeffrey Epstein files, according to three people with knowledge of the exchange.

The disclosure came as part of a broader briefing on the reexamination of the case by FBI agents and prosecutors. It was made by Bondi during a meeting that also included the deputy attorney general, Todd Blanche, and covered a variety of topics. Bondi frequently meets with Trump to brief him on various matters, officials said.

Bondi and Blanche informed the president that his name, as well as those of other high-profile figures, came up in their reexamination of documents connected to the case that had not previously been made public.

It's not clear how significant the references to Trump are. But the briefing sheds light on private West Wing discussions at a moment when the president's team is desperately trying to move on and quell the stubborn rebellion among those Trump supporters who are suspicious of efforts to shut down the case once and for all.

Trump, a friend of Epstein, a disgraced financier, until they had what Trump has described as a fall-

EPSTEIN, Page A7

President's inflation talk does not add up

He says he has ‘solved’ the problem, but economic data tell different story

By Jim Puzzanghera
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — At least three times this month, President Trump has boasted about a past survey of him and dozens of economists, in which he bucked conventional wisdom and predicted his second-term policies would produce a booming US economy by this point, with no inflation.

“They called all of the great intellects and the great economists and all of the great everything,” Trump told reporters at the White House Tuesday. “It was 71 [economists] and only two got it right, me and another gentleman [who] happens to be very smart. Sixty-nine people got it wrong, and the [Federal Reserve] got it wrong, more wrong than anybody.”

There are two problems with Trump's assertion. First, the White House has been unable to identify the survey he keeps referencing. And second, economic growth has slowed this year, and inflation has begun rising as the impact of Trump's high tariffs starts kicking in.

In other words, conventional

INFLATION, Page A6

0.5%
annualized rate the US economy contracted in first three months of the year

2.4%
annualized rate the US economy grew in the last quarter of 2024

PHOTOS BY DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

PATRIOTS GET GOING WITH HIGH HOPES — AND PUPPIES

New England Patriots quarterback Drake Maye (above) signed autographs for fans on the first day of training camp at Gillette Stadium on Wednesday. As part of the festivities, the Patriots Foundation joined with three animal rescue groups to host a dog adoption event at the stadium. At left, Stefon Diggs collected a pup that got loose. C1.

Colleges calculate impact of new endowment taxes

Some analysts say adding students would cut costs

By Anjali Huynh and Hilary Burns
GLOBE STAFF

Elite colleges are now facing what could be their largest financial headache in a year that's been full of them: A new federal endowment tax hike could cost the wealthiest universities hundreds of millions per year. Many are scrambling to contain the fallout.

The tax increase — passed as part of President Trump's “Big Beautiful Bill” — is widely seen as another salvo in Trump's offensive against institutions he sees as bastions of liberal politics. Under the new law, which Trump signed July 4, schools with endowments worth more than $500,000 per student will be taxed 1.4 percent, those with more than $750,000 per student 4 percent, and those with more than $2 million per student 8 percent.

The tax rate is calculated by dividing a school's endowment by its full-time enrollment. More than a dozen schools across the nation are expected to fall under the top tax rate, including Harvard and MIT in Massachusetts.

Now, as university leaders grapple with how to pay their new taxes, some conservative analysts have proposed a possible solution: Admit more students.

The tax, they argue, could help make schools with some of the highest sticker prices in the country more equitable by pushing those with low acceptance rates to increase their enrollments and spend more of their massive endowments on students.

“Part of the anger at elite higher education that we're seeing right now does have its roots in very opaque, nontransparent admissions policies,” said Preston Cooper, an economist at the right-leaning American Enterprise Institute. Increasing tax rates on wealthy en-

ENDOWMENT TAX, Page A10

Healey gives top managers a 2% raise

Pay bump comes even as she highlights cost savings

By Matt Stout
GLOBE STAFF

When she signed Massachusetts' $61 billion state budget, Governor Maura Healey touted taking several cost-saving steps amid “tight and uncertain” times, including halting a planned January pay hike for executive branch managers.

“[We] must all do our part to live within our means,” she told lawmakers in a letter this month.

Left unsaid at the time: Healey is giving those same managers — 3,600 in total — a separate raise this month, a 2 percent increase her administration estimates will cost roughly $10 million this fiscal year.

Members of Healey's Cabinet, most of whom were making more than $202,000 a year, are also eligible for the increase, which would boost their pay by more than $4,000 apiece. The raise would

RAISES, Page A10

Bring the heat

Thursday: Partly sunny, hotter. High: 87-92. Low: 70-75.

Friday: Hot, stormy late. High: 94-99. Low: 69-74.

Sunrise: 5:29 Sunset: 8:12

Comics and Weather, D5-6.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 308, NO. 24

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

Bryan Kohberger was sentenced to life in prison for the murders of four University of Idaho students. A2.

More than 100 charity and human rights groups said that Israel's actions are pushing Palestinians in the Gaza Strip toward starvation, as Israeli strikes killed another 29 people. A3.

The fatal fire at a Fall River facility for seniors is poised to reshape how Massachusetts regulates assisted living homes. B1.

Two top Market Basket executives who were fired by the board of directors slammed the board, calling their dismissals part of a “preplanned coup” aimed at consolidating power. D1.

A protection that seems to be slipping away

Young asylum-seeker imprisoned without charges asks, ‘What did I do?’

By Steven Porter
GLOBE STAFF

LAWRENCE — When federal immigration agents swarmed his worksite just before 6 a.m. on May 16, Jaime thought they would check his paperwork and let him go.

Although the 21-year-old from Ecuador had entered the United States without permission in late 2022, authorities later classified him as a special immigrant juvenile, which means he will eventually be able to apply for a green card. In the meantime, he secured work authorization as an asylum seeker and stayed out of trouble while awaiting a 2026 immigration court hearing.

So he was stunned when agents took him and 10 others into custody that morning in Lowell.

“I had everything in order,” he said in Spanish. “I thought they were going to release me at that moment. But it wasn't like that. They checked everything and they cuffed me, my legs and my hands, and they put me in the black van.”

Jaime, who asked to be identified only by his first name to

ASYLUM, Page A7

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

Jaime entered the US in 2022 without permission. He was classified as a special immigrant juvenile, which means he eventually will be able to apply for a green card.