

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

MONDAY, JUNE 23, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Trump posits Iran regime change

Calls to resume talks mix with statements aimed to intimidate

By Josh Boak and Mike Pesoli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump on Sunday called into question the future of Iran’s ruling theocracy after a surprise attack on three of the country’s nuclear sites, seemingly contradicting his administration’s earlier calls to resume negotiations and avoid an escalation in fighting. “It’s not politically correct to use the term, ‘Regime Change,’ but if the current Iranian Regime is unable to MAKE IRAN GREAT AGAIN, why wouldn’t there be a Regime change???” Trump posted on social media. “MIGA!!!” The posting on Truth Social marked something of a rever-

■ Iran launches more than 40 missiles toward Israel, wounding 23 people.
■ Several close U.S. allies urge a return to the negotiating table.
Nation & World

sal from Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth’s Sunday morning news conference that detailed the aerial bombing. “This mission was not and has not been about regime change,” Hegseth said. What the administration has made clear is that it wants Iran to stop any development of nuclear weapons, with Secretary of State Marco Rubio warning on Fox News’ “Sunday Morning Futures” that any retaliation against the U.S. or a rush toward building a nuclear weapon would “put the regime at risk.” But beyond that, the world is awash in uncertainty at a fragile moment that could decide whether parts of the world tip into war or find a way to salvage a relative peace. Trump’s warning to Iran’s leadership comes as the U.S. has demanded that Iran not respond to the bombardment of the heart of a nuclear program that it spent decades developing. The Trump administration has

Turn to Iran, Page 4

Illinois’ borders unlikely to change

Despite moves made by Indiana lawmakers, new boundaries a long shot

By Dan Petrella
Chicago Tribune

Don’t hold your breath, Hoosiers. The nearly three dozen Illinois counties where a majority of voters in recent years have expressed their desire to leave the Land of Lincoln won’t be joining their neighbor to the east anytime soon — or probably ever — regardless of any recommendation from a bistate commission Indiana Gov. Mike Braun signed off on last month to study the issue. While the measure creating the commission sailed through the Republican-dominated Indiana statehouse on its way to the GOP governor’s desk, a companion proposal from one of Illinois’ most conservative state lawmakers went nowhere in the Democratic-controlled General Assembly before it adjourned its spring session. The disparate responses in Indianapolis and Springfield to the proposed creation of an Indiana-Illinois Boundary Adjustment Commission, described by supporters as a conversation starter but derided by critics as a pointless political stunt, are emblematic of the yawning political divide between the states despite their deep geographic and economic ties.

Here’s a look at how we got here and what comes next: Constitutional requirement When it comes to changing existing state boundaries, the U.S. Constitution is fairly clear. Article IV Section 3 reads: “No new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two

Turn to Border, Page 6

Tens of millions in US brace for more heat

Many areas east of the Mississippi River were under heat advisories Sunday — and some of them could linger through Wednesday. Nation & World

Debut for new leader of Grant Park festival

Music fest artistic director steps into new role by conducting a dynamic performance amid relentless rain. Arts & Living

White Sox log first late comeback of year

Team had been 0-38 when trailing after seven innings this season before rallying to beat the Blue Jays 4-2 on Sunday. Chicago Sports

AUDREY RICHARDSON/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cooling off in the lake

Trey Shuey leaps into the water while hanging out at the pier near North Avenue Beach in Chicago on Sunday. Shuey, from Ohio, was visiting friends in Chicago for the weekend. The recent heat wave is expected to last into Monday. Chicagoland, Page 3

Instructor Jarrod Stephen, center, teaches trainees Anthony Adams, from left, Gregory Buckner and Markis Cooks about wiring and the inverter box as part of the 548 Foundation’s workforce hub at St. Agatha Catholic Church in Chicago on June 5. STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Clean energy job training program offers hope: ‘It’s changed my life’

11 of 16 hubs are now operating in Illinois, serving hundreds

By Nara Schoenberg
Chicago Tribune

Jordan Foley ticks off what he didn’t have when he started an intensive 13-week solar job training program on the West Side: money, a bed, clothes, food. The fear that the program wouldn’t be able to help him was intense, but Foley, 31, pressed on, learning the math, science and construction skills needed to wire and install rooftop solar panels. He took tests, drew up blueprints and did daily physical training: pushups, jumping jacks and solar-panel carrying exercises. And in April, his hard work paid off. He landed a job as a project administrator for a clean energy company. “It’s changed my life,” Foley said of the training program. “It’s definitely changed my life for the better.” Foley is part of the first big wave of state residents to benefit from a long-awaited network of clean energy job training hubs established under Illinois’ ambitious 2021 climate law, the Climate and Equitable Jobs Act. The inclusion of job training was a major demand of environmentalists and their allies, who were determined to see Black and Latino communities share in the benefits of the clean energy economy. Eleven of 16 major training hubs statewide are now up and running, training hundreds of people. “This moment is massive,” said Juliana Pino, interim co-executive director at the Little Village Environmental Justice Organization. “It’s

Turn to Energy, Page 2

Vapes, Zyn, many tobacco products set for tax hikes

Rates will rise July 1, tripling the levy in a number of categories

By Jeremy Gorner
Chicago Tribune

At Mr. Vape & Smoke in Lincoln Park, where a disposable vape device can go for $20, Noe Delgado is used to hearing customers question the cost of feeding their habits. Those costs could soon go up because of a tax hike passed by Illinois lawmakers this spring that would triple the levy on a number of vaping and tobacco products. “It’s a bummer,” said Delgado, who has worked at Mr. Vape & Smoke for about five years. “We have what we have. If you don’t want it, I understand. But that’s what we can do.” Illinois set the tax on vaping products at 15% of the wholesale price about six years ago. The first increase since then kicks in July 1, with the rate going up to 45%. Most tobacco products other than cigarettes, including cigars and chewing tobacco, will also be taxed at 45% of the wholesale price, up from a 36% levy that’s been in place for more than a decade. Also subject to the tax hike are nontobacco nicotine products, such as the popular Zyn nicotine pouches, and lozenges and gum that contain nicotine. Exactly how those costs will be passed on to consumers isn’t clear

Turn to Tax, Page 5