try – and inflicted a humiliating defeat on Labour in a by-election in the previously safe seat of Run-corn and Helsby.

Mr Farage last night hailed his party's performance as a 'Reform-quake' and claimed it signalled 'the end of two-party politics'.

He said Reform had had 'the Labour Party for lunch' and 'wiped out' the Conservatives in parts of England.

Mr Farage said the results marked 'the beginning of the end' for the Conservative Party, with Reform now 'the main opposition party' despite having just five MPs.

Projections suggested the results would put Mr Farage on course to be Prime Minister if they were repeated at a General Election. Polling expert
