

Two Guard troops shot in D.C.

In response to the gunfire, Trump orders more personnel into the nation’s capital.

By ALANNA DURKIN RICHER AND GARY FIELDS

WASHINGTON — Two West Virginia National Guard members who deployed to the nation’s capital were shot Wednesday just blocks from the White House in a brazen act of violence that the mayor described as a targeted attack.

FBI Director Kash Patel and Washington Mayor Muriel Bowser said the Guard members were hospitalized in critical condition.

The shooting unfolded as the presence of troops in the nation’s capital and other cities around the country has been a tinderbox issue for months, fueling court fights and a broader public policy debate about the Trump administration’s use of the military to combat what officials cast as an out-of-control crime problem.

Jeffrey Carroll, an executive assistant D.C. police chief, said investigators had no information on a motive. He said the assailant “came around the corner” and immediately started firing at the troops, citing video reviewed by investigators.

“This was a targeted shooting,” Bowser said.

West Virginia Gov. Patrick Morrisey initially said the troops had died, but later walked back the statement to say his office was “receiving conflicting reports” about their condition.

A suspect who was in custody also was shot and had wounds that were not believed to be life-threatening, according to a law enforcement official who was not authorized to discuss the matter publicly and spoke to the Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

The Trump administration quickly ordered 500 more Guard troops to Washington after the shooting. Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth said President Trump asked him to send the extra members.

Nearly 2,200 troops currently are assigned to the joint task force operating in the city, according to the government’s latest update.

The shooting happened roughly two blocks northwest of the White House near a metro station.

After hearing the gunfire, other troops in the area ran over and held down the shooter after he was shot.

[See Guard, A6]

ROBERT GAUTHIER Los Angeles Times

BUSINESSES in L.A.’s Fashion District look to recover from losses caused by immigration enforcement.

After raids, Fashion District hopes for a Black Friday boon

Lizzie Osorio remembers customers flooding Lion Boots in early May, browsing embroidered shoes and tasseled suede dresses.

Beyoncé had four concerts scheduled in Los Angeles at SoFi Stadium for her Cowboy Carter tour. So the store tucked in Santee Alley, where 24-year-old Osorio works selling cowboy boots and other Western-style clothing, was the perfect stop for fans.

Osorio expected, or perhaps hoped, the store would see similar traffic at the start of the Thanksgiving holiday week.

After the tumult of President Trump’s immigration crackdown, that remains to be seen. Over the summer, several raids in the neighborhood sparked protests. But the mass arrests and fears of deportation

Over the summer, mass arrests and fears of deportation turned area into a ghost town

By Suhauna Hussain

turned the Fashion District into a ghost town for several weeks after, with storefronts shuttered and frightened workers staying home.

The story was the same in other business districts that cater to immigrants. Although conditions have improved in recent months, merchants are still feeling the pain and in desperate need of a holiday retail miracle.

Local officials and activists are encouraging people to shop on Black Friday and beyond, including by holding a festival over the weekend. But it remains unclear how many will feel safe enough to come out.

Some merchants are “living sale to sale, customer to customer,” said Anthony

[See District, A11]

Chance to buy a Midcentury dream

The Stahl House, a 1960s L.A. landmark, hits market for the first time ever.

By CHRISTOPHER REYNOLDS

For decades, the Stahl House in the Hollywood Hills has been a rarity — a globally known icon of Mid-century Modernism and Los Angeles glamour, still in the hands of the family who commissioned it in 1959. But now it’s for sale.

The asking price is $25 million, which might seem a startling figure for a two-bedroom, 2,300-square-foot home on a snug lot. But that figure might not surprise lovers of modernist architecture who know it as Case Study House #22.

It was designed for the Stahl family by architect Pierre Koenig, captured on

JULIUS SHULMAN J. Paul Getty Trust

THIS 1960 image of the home was called “perhaps the most famous picture ever taken of Los Angeles.”

black-and-white film by photographer Julius Shulman and has been admired worldwide ever since.

The Architect’s Newspaper called it “one of the world’s most famous buildings.” Los Angeles magazine called Shulman’s image “perhaps the most famous picture ever taken of Los Angeles.”

“There are no comps for the Stahl House. It’s incomparable,” said William Baker, architecture director for the real estate firm the Agency Beverly Hills. The home was included in the company’s fall catalog Nov. 12.

By Friday afternoon, Baker said, he had received hundreds of inquiring calls. In considering offers, Baker said, the family is open to individuals or institutions — “someone who’s going to understand it, honor the house and the story about it.”

[See Stahl, A6]

Can an AI Jesus draw young Christians?

‘Shroud of Turin’ exhibit relies on tech to bring people to faith

By DEBORAH NETBURN

ALLEN J. SCHABEN Los Angeles Times

A VISITOR attends the opening of “The Shroud of Turin: An Immersive Experience” in Orange County.

On the second floor of a cultural center at Christ Cathedral in Orange County, an AI-rendered depiction of Jesus, calm and smiling, fills one side of the room. Breaking a piece of flatbread in two, he passes it to the 12 similarly enlarged men projected on all four walls around him. On the ground are images of heaping plates of food — roast lamb, vegetables, olives and dips.

“Take and eat,” the AI Jesus says. “This is my body.”

In the center of the room, real-life visitors arrayed on 26 swivel chairs turn their heads back and forth to take in the supersized Last Supper occurring all around them. Already, they have been plunged into the sea of Galilee watching as Jesus walked on water and witnessed his transfiguration on a mountaintop. It was all part of what’s being touted as “a museum unlike any other, where faith and forensics meet.”

Located five miles from Disneyland on the Garden Grove campus that once

[See Jesus, A6]

In Lebanon, hope and anticipation grow as pope begins overseas trip

By NABIH BULOS

BEIRUT — When Pope Leo XIV visits the Middle East this week, he comes to a conflict-weary region struggling to find peace even as the specter of war stalks it once again.

In his first international trip since assuming the papacy in May, the Chicago-born pope will travel Thursday to Turkey, where he will celebrate the 1,700th anniversary of the Council of Nicaea, where the Nicene Creed — a foundational declaration of Christian belief and unity — was written in AD 325.

But perhaps the real test of Leo’s international debut lies in Lebanon. His trip fulfills a promise to visit the country made by his boldly charismatic predecessor Pope Francis, who raised the papacy’s international profile with dozens of visits abroad and a propensity for frankness in his commentary that endeared him to the faithful, especially in the Middle East.

But Christians — estimated to be about 30% of

[See Pope, A4]

Fire kills dozens in Hong Kong

At least 36 people are dead and 279 reported missing as rescuers pull residents from a high-rise apartment building. WORLD, A3

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

Trump election case is dismissed

New prosecutor won’t pursue charges against president and others for alleged interference in Georgia. NATION, A5

Weather
Clouds and sun; warm. L.A. Basin: 80/51. B6

He’s thankful for Dodgers bounty

Memorable moments came at a breakneck pace in fall, writes Bill Plaschke. SPORTS, B10

7 85944 00200 5