

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 2025

MARK SCHIEFELBEIN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Members of the National Guard gathered after reports of the shooting in Washington, D.C., on Wednesday.

2 Guard members shot in D.C.

Suspect wounded after attack near the White House

By Jenny Gathright,
Emily Davies,
and Dana Hedgpeth
WASHINGTON POST

Two National Guard members were shot and critically wounded Wednesday afternoon outside the White House complex in what officials described as a targeted attack.

A suspect — who police say appears to be the only shooter

— was shot and then taken into custody, according to authorities.

The suspected shooter was identified as an Afghan national who entered the United States in 2021 and at some point lived in Washington state, according to multiple people familiar with the investigation who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss sensitive information. Two of those people said the suspect was Rahmanullah Lakanwal.

Police did not comment on a potential motive.

The wounded Guard members were from West Virginia, sent to D.C. to support President Trump's deployment of more than 2,000 National Guard troops to address what he called a "crime emergency" in the nation's capital. A judge had recently said their presence in the city was illegal. The Guard troops were apparently ambushed, officials said, while patrolling in broad daylight in a busy downtown corridor typically packed with tourists and federal workers.

"Our prayers are with these brave service members, their families, and the entire Guard community," wrote West Virginia Gov. Joe Manchin. NATIONAL GUARD, Page A7

RISING TO THE CHALLENGE

Owning a bakery isn't for the faint of heart, or those who like to sleep occasionally, but the draw is powerful

PHOTOS BY CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF

Noel Graham said he enjoys the early morning sky when he's up and baking. He and his wife, Stephanie, trade off the 3 a.m. shift at Bonny Breads in Beverly, and sometimes keep their children, Isla and Lucy, entertained with some hands-on dough work.

By Billy Baker
GLOBE STAFF

BEVERLY — It's 3 a.m. on Cabot Street, the uneasy hour that can't decide if it's very late or very early, and Stephanie Graham slides a key in the lock to open the side door of her bakery, Bonny Breads.

Forty minutes earlier, her alarm had gone off, and she got out of bed, poured herself a cup of coffee, and left behind her sleeping husband, Noel Graham — they swap off working the 3 a.m. shift at the bakery — and their two toddlers. As she made the short drive to the bakery from her home in Salem, she tried to wake herself up to prepare to care for that other living thing that has been destroying her sleep in recent years: Bonny, the sourdough starter she created seven years ago.

Many discovered the pleasures of baking during the COVID-19 lockdown, and with it that dream of opening your own bakery, that craving for a homey, back-to-basics, elemental profession, full of allure and com-

BAKERY, Page A10

Start the carve

Thursday: Breezy, pleasant.
High 47-52. Low 32-37.

Friday: Colder, windy.
High 40-45. Low 29-34.

High tide: 3:49 a.m., 3:55 p.m.
Sunrise: 6:49 Sunset: 4:14

Weather and Comics, D4-5.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:
BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 308, NO. 150

*

Suggested retail price
$5.00

Throughout the state, it's a day to feel grateful but for some it's a stark reminder of loss and absence. B1.

President Trump appears to have softened his demand for Ukraine to sign a deal by today. A3.

Unionized workers at Blue Bottle Coffee walked out as negotiations with the cafe chain's newly formed union stalled. D1.

A judge in Georgia dismissed the last pending criminal prosecution against President Trump. A2.

'Do [federal employees] really want to be spending money during the holidays? Because maybe this could happen again.'

BETH WILLWERTH, IRS worker

Relief at shutdown's end is short-lived for federal workers

By Julian E.J. Sorapuru
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — Each night before work, Beth Willwerth lays out clothes for the next day on her bedroom dresser. Usually, she throws them on before the sun rises since clock-in time at the Andover, Mass., IRS office is 6 a.m.

But during the record-long government shutdown, her work clothes sat untouched for over a month. When the shutdown ended on Nov. 12, Willwerth felt a sense of relief washing those clothes, knowing she was finally headed back to work and life as a paid professional.

"I'll be glad the days of me watching C-SPAN on a Sunday night instead of 'Sunday Night Football' [are over],"

she joked. "All I want to do is work, and that's all federal employees want to do."

For 43 days, many federal workers like Willwerth were in limbo: furloughed from their jobs without pay and with no end in sight. Some were forced into lines for free food after missing multiple checks, others deferred payment on their monthly bills, and many sought short-term loans, took second jobs, or applied for temporary unemployment assistance.

Meanwhile, the Trump administration used the shutdown as a backdrop to lay off additional federal employees, cut funding to specific government programs, and threaten to withhold certain federal employees' legally SHUTDOWN, Page A6

Grudgingly, N.H. towns repeal their welcomes

Sanctuary city ban forces hand

By Amanda Gokee
GLOBE STAFF

CONCORD, N.H. — Earlier this year, as the Trump administration cracked down on immigration and targeted cities like Boston, Governor Kelly Ayotte signed New Hampshire's sanctuary city ban into law. The measure made the reddish-purple state the first in New England to prohibit governments from restricting cooperation between local law enforcement and federal agents.

"This is something we ran on to make sure that New Hampshire would not go the way of Massachusetts and their billion-dollar illegal immigration crisis," Ayotte said during the bill signing in May.

Months later, many of the White House's threats to cut funding to sanctuary cities have been held up by legal challenges. But those barriers aren't getting in Ayotte's way. With key provisions of the law set to take effect on Jan. 1, progressive-leaning communities in New Hampshire are making moves to follow orders, even as some residents are divided about what is the right thing to do.

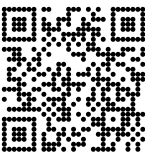

At least two municipalities, Lebanon and Hanover, have identified local ordinances that conflict with the statewide ban, and both have been working to determine how to comply with the law — or whether to flout it.

If they do not comply, local governments risk losing 25 SANCTUARY CITIES, Page A7

Thank you to all our supporters!

HELP GLOBE SANTA BRING BOOKS & TOYS TO KIDS IN NEED

Globe Santa
70 Years of Giving

SCAN TO DONATE
VIA VENMO

SCAN TO DONATE AT
GLOBESANTA.ORG

Boston Globe
FOUNDATION