

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Trump, Putin agree to partial truce

Russia doesn't accept full 30-day ceasefire that Ukraine backed

By Aamer Madhani and Zeke Miller
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin agreed during a lengthy call Tuesday to an immediate pause in strikes against energy and infrastructure targets in the Ukraine war, but the Russian leader stopped short of backing a broader 30-day pause in fighting that the U.S. administration is pressing for.

The White House described it as the first step in a “movement to peace” it hopes will eventually include a maritime ceasefire in the Black Sea and a full and lasting end to the fighting.

“We agreed to an immediate

Ceasefire on all Energy and Infrastructure, with an understanding that we will be working quickly to have a Complete Ceasefire and, ultimately, an END to this very horrible War,” Trump posted on social media after his call.

The White House added negotiations would “begin immediately” in the Middle East on those steps. It was not clear whether Ukraine is on board with the phased ceasefire plan. Shortly after the call between Trump and Putin, air raid alerts sounded in Kyiv, followed by explosions in the city.

Ukrainian officials had proposed a limited ceasefire covering the Black Sea and long-range missile strikes and the release of prisoners at their meeting with the U.S. delegation in Saudi Arabia this month.

The Kremlin said Putin welcomed Trump’s calls for the maritime ceasefire and “agreed to begin negotiations to further work out specific details of such an agreement.”

Putin also told Trump that Russia and Ukraine are set to exchange 175 prisoners of war each Wednesday, and Russia also will hand over to Ukraine 23 badly wounded soldiers, the Kremlin said.

Putin also called on Trump to end foreign military and intelli-

Turn to Truce, Page 4

Fabiola Pacheco Delacruz becomes emotional while speaking about her daughter Zulma Daniela Calderon Pacheco, alongside Zulma's sister, Melanie Calderon, left, Tuesday at the offices of Cavanagh Sorich Law Group, where her family announced a lawsuit against Mansion Live and a security guard charged in Calderon Pacheco's death. BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Family of Stone Park nightclub shooting victim files lawsuit

Suspect charged with involuntary manslaughter, aggravated unlawful use of weapon

By Laura Rodríguez Presa, Carolyn Stein and Madeline Buckley
Chicago Tribune

Fabiola Pacheco Delacruz was only 18 when she had her daughter, so in a way, she said, they grew up together as close as best friends.

Her daughter, Zulma Daniela Calderon Pacheco, was joyful and hardworking, her mother said. The 21-year-old worked at a Little Village Popeyes while she figured out plans to go back to school. She was the oldest of five and always helped her mom around the house, her loved ones said.

But Calderon Pacheco's young life was violently interrupted when she was shot and killed while on the dance floor with her boyfriend at a west suburban nightclub on March 8. A bouncer who wasn't supposed to have a gun fired a shot during a scuffle at Mansion Live nightclub in Stone Park, prosecutors alleged at a court hearing Tuesday in Maywood.

The bullet struck Calderon Pacheco, prosecutors said, even though she had nothing to do with the fight.

“Me arrebataron la mitad de mi vida. Half of my life was taken from me,” the victim’s mother said while crying.

The shooting that happened as revelers danced early in the morning on a Saturday has spurred a lawsuit against the nightclub and felony charges against the bouncer, Kevin Henley, 35. Tearful family members spoke at a news conference in the Loop on Tuesday, asking for answers.

Henley is charged with involuntary manslaughter and aggravated unlawful use of a weapon, both class 4 felonies.

During Tuesday’s hearing, Henley’s public defender argued that the gun went off as her client was attacked.

Turn to Lawsuit, Page 4

Report: No easy fixes to ease CPS budget gap

Financial advisory group details risks in several proposals

By Nell Salzman and Alice Yin
Chicago Tribune

A report commissioned by Mayor Brandon Johnson’s hand-picked Board of Education president confirmed what Chicago Public Schools officials have known for months about the district’s financial woes: There are no easy solutions.

The school board released a report from outside financial advisory firm Baker Tilly on Tuesday afternoon, two days before a meeting where board members will vote on a measure that will have huge financial implications for the district and the city moving forward. It doesn’t provide much additional information or insight other than what has been provided at meetings and hearings in recent weeks, school board members said.

According to the report, massive midyear cuts would require significant staff reductions or as many as 10 to 11 furlough days across the district. Asking the city for more money from tax increment financing, or TIF, districts “presents challenges,” the report says. And debt restructuring, an option recently floated by the city, could also pose risks.

On Thursday, a divided board — part elected and part appointed by Mayor Brandon Johnson — will face a decision: whether to approve a proposed budget amendment that opens the door for CPS to make a $175 million pension payment for non-teacher staff to the city or restart the amendment process next month. The amendment process takes 15 days in total.

Despite a record $311 million in extra money from the city’s TIF districts for CPS, there isn’t enough money to cover a new teachers contract, a collective bargaining

Turn to Report, Page 6

INSIDE

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Eye-opener for the Cubs at Tokyo Dome

Shota Imanaga tosses four shutout innings and works around walks in 4-1 loss at Tokyo Dome. Plus, top prospect Matt Shaw makes MLB debut: 0-for-4 with 2 strikeouts and a throwing error. Chicago Sports

Passion and patience

City’s female wine professionals are driving change, but obstacles remain in an industry long dominated by men. Food & Health

State legislators look to establish rules for AI

Lawmakers grappling with how to address evolving technology

By Jeremy Gornor
Chicago Tribune

SPRINGFIELD — About a year and a half ago, Crystal Lake South High School math teacher Sarah Murmann grew concerned when she heard one of her students say he met his girlfriend through an artificial intelligence-based social media site.

The revelation ignited a larger conversation with her class about what they knew about AI, which made her realize she was not adequately informed about the new technology.

“Despite all the potential that I’ve seen with AI, there’s still a gap in Illinois,” Murmann said last week during a state House committee hearing on legislation that would establish guide-

Turn to AI, Page 2

Sarah Murmann teaches her dual-credit statistics class for seniors at Crystal Lake South High School on Tuesday. Murmann testified at a state House committee hearing on legislation that would establish guidelines for teachers and school administrators on how to use artificial intelligence. ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

