As Mail investigation finds collisions have TREBLED in just three years – with 29 deaths – campaigners call for legal crackdown

END MENACE OF THE E-SCOOTERS, MINISTERS TOLD

EXCLUSIVE

By Richard Marsden

E-SCOOTER collisions have trebled in three years, prompting urgent calls for law changes.

Deaths and serious injuries linked to the motorised machines have also reached worryingly high levels, a Mail investigation found.

Safety campaigners, including the family of the first pedestrian killed in an e-scooter collision, are calling for legal safeguards on their use, and want police to enforce the rules banning them from pavements.

In total, 29 people died between 2020 and 2023 in 4,515 e-scooter collisions, which also caused 4,807 injuries, 1,402 of them serious.

AA president Edmund King said: 'These figures show a worrying trend that needs to be nipped in the bud by legislation and better police enforcement.'

He said legislation was needed urgently to 'regulate top speeds, brakes and size of wheels' and to prevent the importation of dangerous batteries which can cause fires. Across the UK in 2020, there were 460 collisions involving the
