

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 2025

‘Planning queer prom is an escape because it’s a way to think about current queer culture in a positive light.’

HOPE HUFFMAN, who has helped plan a queer prom at Hingham High School for three years

PHOTOS BY ERIN CLARK/GLOBE STAFF

Students played with balloons during Hingham High School’s queer prom last weekend.

QUEER PROMS ARE ABOUT JOY — AND RESPITE

With DEI and trans rights under fire, students create safe celebrations

By Claire Thornton

GLOBE STAFF

Nicole Amaturio’s childhood was full of thumping dance music. The nonbinary high school senior grew up with a mom who is a DJ and event planner, and this spring they decided to follow in their mom’s footsteps by organizing a Pawtucket prom called Queer Youth Boogie Night.

Amaturio began advertising the event on social media. But their eagerness came to a halt in March when they received a death threat in an Instagram direct message after posting about the prom. The message referred to Amaturio using slurs and the person wrote, “I know your IP address,” Amaturio, 19, said in an interview.

“I don’t know why people are just so hateful,” said Amaturio, who will study culinary arts and hospitality next year at Providence’s Johnson & Wales University.

Queer proms have for years offered students an alternative to traditional proms, which can be loaded with unspoken expectations about gender roles and attire. But now, as Presi-

QUEER PROMS, Page A10

Erudite Raine helped partner Nicole Amaturio with their shoes at the Queer Youth Boogie Night in Pawtucket, R.I.

Migrant is back in US from El Salvador

Will be tried on charges of human smuggling; lawyers call case ‘baseless’

By Devlin Barrett, Alan Feuer, and Glenn Thrush

NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — Kilmar Abrego Garcia, the man at the center of a political and legal maelstrom after he was mistakenly deported to El Salvador, was flown back to the United States on Friday to face charges of having transported migrants living in the country illegally.

The stunning move by the Trump administration, after months of fighting any effort to return him, could end the most high-profile court battle over President Trump’s authority to rapidly seize and deport immigrants.

The decision to pull Abrego Garcia out of El Salvador and instead put him on trial in an American courtroom could provide an off-ramp for the Trump administration, which had bitterly opposed court orders requiring the government to take steps to return him after his wrongful removal in March.

The 10-page indictment — filed in US District Court in Nashville, Tenn., in May and unsealed Friday — might also be an effort to save face: Bringing Abrego Garcia back to face criminal charges allows the White House to avoid a legal confrontation, while pressing claims he is a crimi-

ABREGO GARCIA, Page A7

Lynch seeks leadership role at tricky time

Democratic Party weighs experience vs. new blood

By Tal Kopan

GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — After more than two decades in Congress, Boston Representative Stephen Lynch is hoping to finally become the top Democrat on a key House committee, after falling short twice before.

But the race is happening at a time when his seniority on the committee might work against him, as he becomes the latest face of Democrats’ struggles over whether to make generational change in its leadership.

Lynch is one of four Democrats, so far, in the running to be ranking member on the Oversight Committee, a position that would place him at the forefront of Democrats’ efforts to investigate and check President Trump if they were to flip the House in next year’s midterms. In the meantime, the committee of over four dozen members, where Republicans have a five-seat advantage, remains a setting for high-profile hearings — like one featuring liberal city mayors including Mayor Michelle Wu.

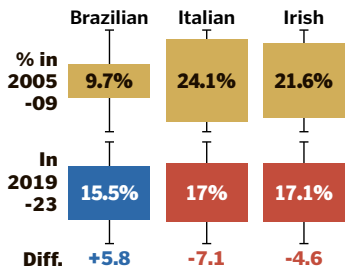

Lynch’s standing as the longest-tenured member of the committee might have made him a shoo-in in another era. But the value of longevity has been eroding in recent years and instead the race

LYNCH, Page A6

Town’s immigrant past informs present

Milford ancestry

Share and percentage point difference of residents with Brazilian, Italian, and Irish ancestry.

After teen’s detention, Milford grapples with deportation issues

By Danny McDonald, Marcela Rodrigues, and Laura Crimaldi

GLOBE STAFF

MILFORD — The fear was real here this week. In multiple Brazilian markets with signs advertising “Paes e Bolos,” Portuguese for breads and cakes. On a sidewalk outside of a cafe in a strip mall. Behind a butcher shop counter displaying different cuts of steak and varieties of sausages.

People, many of them immigrants who hail from Brazil, were worried in the wake of immigration authorities arresting Marcelo Gomes da Silva, an 18-year-old high school student with no criminal record who was detained on his way to volleyball practice last weekend.

“People are afraid,” said Kennedy Santos, a manager of a local Brazilian restaurant who migrated from Brazil in 1985. “They don’t leave their homes.”

For Gomes’s family, worry was replaced by at least a modicum of tempo-

MILFORD, Page A7

Report says state neglected records of those in its care

By Jason Laughlin

GLOBE STAFF

David Scott’s recollection of his older brother has faded over some five decades, leaving him with little more than impressions.

He can picture an adolescent boy in a wheelchair, his legs atrophied by spina bifida. Just 5 at the time, Scott, now 59, recalls being nervous during the only visit he can remember to the Walter E. Fernald Developmental Center, an infamous state home for disabled people in Waltham where his brother John spent his entire life; just days after John’s birth, state officials determined his parents couldn’t take care of him because, Scott said, they were poor and didn’t own a car.

Scott was 7 when his brother died at age 18. Now, after a half-century and a long fight, Scott is learning more about his brother through the 100 or so pages of records he has pried from the state. He has also been able to identify his brother’s final resting place: an unnamed grave at the cemetery for Fernald residents in Waltham.

“My parents never had a

INSTITUTIONS, Page A10

REMEMBERING THE HEROES OF D-DAY

Attendees joined D-Day US veteran Jake Larson, 102, before a ceremony marking the 81st anniversary of the landing, Friday at the American Cemetery in Colleville-sur-Mer, France. A5.

LOU BENOIST/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

The Supreme Court gave the Department of Government Efficiency access to Social Security systems containing personal data on millions of Americans. A6.

Russia launched one of the largest barrages of missiles and drones of the war at targets across Ukraine. A4.

Clark University said it would reduce its faculty by as much as 30 percent and comprehensively review its academic offerings. B1.

Close quarters

Saturday: Cloudy, humid. High: 71-76. Low: 59-64.

Sunday: Drier, some sun. High: 66-71. Low: 55-60.

Sunrise: 5:08 Sunset: 8:19

Comics and Weather, D4-5.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 158

*

Suggested retail price

$4.00

0 947725 4