

On to the quarterfinals

ANNE-CHRISTINE POUJOLAT/AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE/GETTY IMAGES

With his straight-sets victory against Daniel Altmaier on Sunday, Maryland native Frances Tiafoe reached the quarterfinals of the French Open for the first time. The 27-year-old joined Tommy Paul in the round of eight; this is the first time since 1996 that more than one American man made the quarterfinals. More in Sports, D1

Ukraine attacks Russian aircraft in drone strikes

SMUGGLED WEAPONS HIT 5 AIR BASES

Broad assaults on strategic targets in remote areas

BY FRANCESCA EBEL, LEO SANDS, DAVID L. STERN AND NATALIA ABBAKUMOVA

On the eve of bilateral peace talks in Istanbul, Ukraine's security services launched a massive drone attack against five air bases inside Russia, officials in both countries said Sunday, in one of the most penetrating assaults of Russian territory by Ukrainian forces since the war began.

The Security Service of Ukraine claimed responsibility for the attack, which saw Ukrainian drones smuggled into Russia before they struck strategic airfields in remote areas, including Siberia, for the first time.

President Volodymyr Zelensky hailed the assault as "brilliant" and "perfectly prepared." He said Ukraine used 117 drones to take more than a third of Russia's cruise missile carriers and had safely transported those who helped with the attacks out of Russia before the strikes began. "These are Ukrainian actions that will definitely be in history textbooks," he wrote on Telegram on Sunday.

Russia's Defense Ministry called the operation a "terrorist attack" and confirmed in a statement published by Russian state newswires that airfields had been attacked by drones in the Murmansk, Irkutsk, Ivanovo, Ryazan and Amur regions. "Several units of aircraft caught fire," the statement read.

Russian warplanes carry out daily attacks on Ukrainian cities, and Kyiv has long lamented that it has been unable to thwart such bombardments, in part because its partners have imposed restrictions on using Western-supplied weapons for strikes deep inside Russia. The operation Sunday demonstrated that Ukraine has in the meantime found a way to deploy its own weapons to reach previously unattainable targets.

SEE UKRAINE ON A9

For new refugees, two very different Americas

Families from Myanmar and South Africa arrived in Alabama. That's where the similarities end.

BY SILVIA FOSTER-FRAU

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. — After years of living in a makeshift hut at a refugee camp in the woods of Bangladesh, Shom Mehrasz boarded an airplane for the first time in her life and flew across the world to this city in August.

She and her family had endured the unthinkable in Myanmar. Military officers kidnapped and raped young women in their village. Neighbors were rounded up and shot to death before their very eyes in what has been internationally recognized as a genocide. They told the officials who spent over two years vetting them as refugees about how their home had been burned to the ground.

Thousands of miles away in South Africa, Errol Langton had also experienced violence firsthand. Decades earlier, he said, he had been stabbed 15 times by a Black intruder in his home. He believes the crime is part of a pattern of attacks on Afrikaners like himself, though there is no evidence of a broader campaign of targeted violence against White farmers.

The road to becoming refugees took both families to Birmingham, Alabama. But that is where the two families' similarities end.

When President Donald Trump took office, he suspended the U.S. refugee program, preventing many people facing persecution from entering the United States.

But in February, his administration offered refugee status to Afrikaners for the first time. Langton immediately logged onto his computer and submitted his application to the U.S. Embassy. He arrived here three months later.

Now, both are being resettled by Inspiritus, a refugee resettlement nonprofit that has helped thousands of people rebuild their lives in the South. The president paused or reduced funding for

SEE REFUGEES ON A10

Europe holds its breath amid tight Polish presidential race

No clear winner in vote serving as referendum on E.U. and Trump

BY AARON WIENER

SLUBICE, POLAND — Polish voters cast their ballots for president Sunday in an extremely tight race that could deliver a victory for the nationalist right or steer the country toward greater European integration.

Three exit polls Sunday evening showed a race that was too close to call. Two had liberal Warsaw Mayor Rafal Trzaskowski leading conservative nationalist historian Karol Nawrocki by a fraction of a percentage point, while the third put Nawrocki on top by a slightly larger amount, but still within the margin of error.

A win for Trzaskowski would bolster the pro-European agenda of Prime Minister Donald Tusk's centrist government and stem the rapid emergence of the continent's right wing. A Nawrocki victory, in contrast, could endanger the future of Tusk's ruling coalition and open a divide between Poland and its E.U. neighbors.

The election attracted widespread international attention as a clash of ideologies mirroring broader trends on the global stage — particularly as Europe deals with a growing rift with the United States under President Donald Trump.

Last month, Trump invited Nawrocki to the Oval Office. On Tuesday, U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Kristi L. Noem had urged Poles to elect Nawrocki, saying he would work together with Trump. "He needs to be the next president of Poland," Noem said at the Conservative Political Action Conference's first meeting in Poland.

Trzaskowski declared victory shortly after polls closed, but Nawrocki also told supporters he was confident of a win.

Sunday's vote was a runoff between

SEE POLAND ON A10

Trump scraps a civil rights analysis and scuttles cases

BY JULIAN MARK AND LAURA MECKLER

For decades, the federal government has used data analysis to ferret out race and sex discrimination, winning court cases and reaching settlements in housing, education, policing and across American life. Now the Trump administration is working to unwind those same cases.

In recent weeks, the Justice Department backed out of an agreement with an Atlanta bank accused of systematically discouraging Black and Latino home buyers from applying for loans. The Education Department terminated an agreement with a South Dakota school district where Native American students were disciplined at higher rates than their White peers. And federal prosecutors have dropped several racial discrimination reform agreements involving state and local police departments — including that of Minneapolis, where George Floyd was murdered by an officer in 2020.

The Justice Department now is reviewing its entire docket and has already dismissed or terminated "many" cases that were

SEE DISCRIMINATION ON A7

BRANDON DILL/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Memphis residents, including many at a Shelby County Health Department public meeting in April, have voiced concerns about the use of gas turbines to power a multibillion-dollar supercomputer.

A city's dream deal comes with a surprise: Musk

BY HOLLY BAILEY

MEMPHIS — For decades, this storied American city has watched companies come but mostly go, its vacant storefronts and blighted buildings a reminder of its days as a thriving manufacturing hub and the painful decline that followed as those jobs vanished.

As Paul Young, the city's mayor, puts it, Memphis has been "the city people forgot about."

Then last summer, Memphis landed what Young and local business leaders called the city's largest corporate investment in a generation — a "transformative" development for a place that has struggled to convince outsiders of its continued potential.

The project was something every city dreams of, Young said in a recent interview — an estimated $12 billion private investment that came with no requests for tax incentives or other economic concessions demanded of Memphis in the past, one he believed could create hundreds of jobs. "A game changer," he said.

Then came the mic drop, as some Memphians tell it: The city's surprise suitor was Elon

SEE MEMPHIS ON A4

IN THE NEWS

Over 30 killed near Gaza aid site Scores of Palestinians were slain and wounded by gunfire that witnesses said came from Israeli military positions. A11

Harris's future As the former vice president weighs joining California's gubernatorial race, some Democrats are moving on. A2

THE NATION President Donald Trump's attempts to punish law firms have been rejected by courts, but lawyers say the sanctions have still had a chilling effect on the industry. A3

THE WORLD South Koreans will go to the polls Tuesday to elect a new president after the removal of Yoon Suk Yeol in April. A8 India has launched a diplomatic blitz after its clash with Pakistan. A11

THE ECONOMY Wall Street is privately warning the Trump administration that the GOP tax bill could jolt bond markets. A6

THE REGION Montgomery County may need to spend tens of millions over four years on maintaining its trash incinerator. B1

A cavalry dog named Doc Holliday will be among the ranks of the Army's 250th birthday parade in D.C. B1 An after-school program serving low-income families in Northern Virginia is stretching its budget to survive after the cancellation of AmeriCorps grants. B1

STYLE As tariffs increase the cost of designer goods and their knockoffs, the question of where something is made has taken on a new urgency in the world of fashion. C1 Taylor Swift got what she wanted. So what do "Taylor's Versions" mean now? C1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A14
COMICS.....C7
OBITUARIES.....B4
OPINION PAGES.....A12
TELEVISION.....C6
WORLD NEWS.....A8

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54235

