

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

TRUMP'S IMMIGRATION CRACKDOWN

City leaders vow to ‘resist’

People argue with Chicago police officers after some were detained in the Loop on Tuesday. ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mayor: No obligation to give ICE data

Mayor Brandon Johnson on Wednesday condemned the federal government's hunt for local records following ICE subpoenaing an ID program used by noncitizens. Chicagoland, Page 3

■ Protests over immigration raids pop up across nation, with more planned for the coming days. Nation & World in Business, Page 4

Mayor, others taking hard line as Chicago may be next target

By Sam Charles, Caroline Kubzansky and Alice Yin
Chicago Tribune

With protests putting a spotlight on unrest in Los Angeles and more agents from Immigration and Customs Enforcement apparently heading to Chicago, the city's leaders so far are not flinching when it comes to being forced into cooperation with federal authorities taking part in a crackdown.

Speaking at a City Hall news conference, Mayor Brandon Johnson went on the offensive. "This is a necessary fight for all of us to be able to push back," Johnson said. "Whether we use the courts or whether we continue to protest or raise our

Turn to Chicago, Page 4

Mayors in LA region call on Trump to end raids, pull out troops

By Christopher Weber, Amy Taxin, John Seewer and Jake Offenhartz
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Dozens of mayors from across the Los Angeles region banded together Wednesday to demand that the Trump administration stop the stepped-up immigration raids that have spread fear across their cities and sparked protests across the country.

They called on President Donald Trump to pull back on using armed military troops alongside immigration agents during the raids. National Guard members also have temporarily detained civilians during protests before turning

Turn to California, Page 4

Pritzker set to testify before Congress on sanctuary policies

By Daniel C. Vock and Rick Pearson
Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON — Illinois Gov. JB Pritzker has said he plans to use a U.S. House committee hearing Thursday to educate Republican lawmakers on how the state's so-called sanctuary policies have helped create safer communities.

But spiraling events triggered by the Trump administration's recent forceful immigration enforcement tactics, including in Los Angeles and Chicago, could turn a politically contentious debate far more combative.

Beginning at 9 a.m. Chicago time Thursday, Pritzker will appear alongside fellow

Turn to Pritzker, Page 2

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Boost for pensions has steep price tag

Hike in benefits for downstate officers, firefighters cost city

By A.D. Quig, Olivia Olander and Jeremy Gorner
Chicago Tribune

Last-minute changes approved by Illinois lawmakers in the waning days of the session will cost Chicago taxpayers tens of millions of dollars in their first year and billions over time by giving some police officers and firefighters more lucrative pensions.

Lead sponsor Sen. Robert Martwick, a Chicago Democrat, told the Tribune the tweaks were a negotiated fix agreed to by Mayor Brandon Johnson and Gov. JB Pritzker that was promised to both bring parity between Chicago and downstate first responders and help bridge a shortfall in benefits for employees hired after 2010.

Johnson's finance team estimated the initial cost would be $52 million in 2027. Budget watchdogs warned it will add billions to the city's pension liability, a figure that topped $37 billion by the end of 2023.

"It adds to the city's burdens at the worst possible moment, with no consideration of the city's actual capacity to meet those burdens," said Joe Ferguson, the president of the Civic Federation.

Chicago Chief Financial Officer Jill Jaworski's office is still "conducting a comprehensive analysis" of the long-term cost of the legislation, her team said in an email, and would have updated figures in the coming weeks. "Given the speed with which the amendment was introduced, any estimates at this stage would be

Turn to Pensions, Page 9

Never wavering from his South Side roots, Pope Leo XIV's attendance at 2005 World Series leaves champion White Sox with an immaculate legacy

Pope Leo XIV wears a White Sox cap as he meets newly wedded couples at the Vatican on Wednesday. FILIPPO MONTEFORTE/GETTY-AFP

Divine revelations

By Andrew Carter | Chicago Tribune

In the moment, the man who will go on to become the most recognizable religious leader in the world looks nervous. He looks as though even his considerable faith can be tested by the whims of his favorite baseball team. As if, perhaps, he's offering a silent prayer for one more out.

In the moment, Robert Prevost, the native South Sider destined to become first American-born pope, is at the mercy of fickle spirits with Old Testament tempers. The baseball gods can be cruel and smiting, especially in Chicago, and Prevost has to understand this as well as anyone.

One day people will come to see where he sat, to have their pictures taken and to feel a connection to him and their faith.

One day soon, on Saturday, the team he roots for, the Chicago White Sox, will host an outdoor Mass in his honor and in celebration of a moment they shared.

But the pilgrimages and the Mass will come a long time after he stands, like tens of thousands around him stand, in the anxious delirium of the top of the ninth inning of Game 1 of the 2005 World Series. It is then when the television camera finds him, by chance or by fate.

There are two outs and the White Sox, holding a 5-3 lead against the Houston Astros, have their hard-throwing 24-year-old closer, Bobby Jenks, on the mound. The energy in what was then called U.S. Cellular Field radiates through the broadcast. Joe Buck, narrating the play-by-play, reiterates that it's the first World Series game in Chicago since 1959 and, after a 95-mph fastball from Jenks, the Sox "are two strikes away from a win here in 2005 in Game 1."

The noise increases and then it happens in a quick shot of the crowd. "What

Turn to Pope, Page 5

Amid despair, a vital discovery

One part of the infamous Statesville prison experiments story has been largely ignored: the role of Black prisoners in that research, which helped lead to the practice of using genetic testing to understand medication reactions, scholars say in a new article. Business

Creative force of Beach Boys dies

Brian Wilson, the Beach Boys' visionary and fragile leader whose genius for melody, arrangements and self-expression inspired summertime anthems, dies at age 82. Nation & World in Business, Page 6

Paving the way for Airbnb bans

Chicago aldermen take a step on Wednesday toward giving themselves the power to ban Airbnb and other short-term rentals from opening in their wards, and the measure could now face a final vote by the entire city council as soon as next week. Chicagoland, Page 3

