

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2025

US revokes visas of over 2 dozen at Mass. schools

The sudden actions have unnerved campuses amid a broader crackdown

By Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio, Brooke Hauser, and Spencer Buell

GLOBE STAFF

The Trump administration had revoked the visas of more than two dozen students or former students at colleges and universities across Massachusetts as of Monday, as part of a continuing crackdown on international students that has intensified in recent weeks.

The cancellation of visas without warning has international students, higher education institutions, and political leaders here on high alert. Several colleges and universities said they only learned of the revocations by proactively checking immigration databases.

Fifteen of the students attend various campuses in the University of Massachusetts system, according to a university spokesperson.

UMass president Marty Meehan called the Trump administration's cancellation of so many student visas "unprecedented."

"These actions by the federal government are extremely troubling and upsetting," Meehan said Monday. "Massachusetts and the nation have grown stronger because of this infusion of talent."

The State Department, which has the authority to revoke visas, declined to offer specifics on the cases. The Trump administration has promised to

VISAS, Page A7

CEO pay rises as health care nonprofits falter

Analysts defend practice; employees denounce it

By Jessica Bartlett

GLOBE STAFF

When Commonwealth Care Alliance was teetering on the verge of collapse in October and looking to be acquired, the chief executive officer of the nonprofit health insurer was also seeking assurances he would get a big payout.

CEO Chris Palmieri approached Commonwealth Care board members with a demand, according to multiple people with knowledge of the negotiations who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss sensitive conversations: He wanted a payment guarantee if the insurer was acquired, raising concerns he could walk away and jeopardize a potential deal. The board agreed to provide Palmieri a "success fee" of more than $2 million for an acquisition, according to those people with knowledge of the negotiations.

Facing huge debts and low on cash, Commonwealth Care has eliminated more than 100 positions over the last year and is still desperately seeking a savior. But, should Palmieri receive the success fee, along with a separate multimillion dollar

CEOS, Page A10

At wet's end

Tuesday: Rain and wind. High 41-46, low 28-33.

Wednesday: Sun returns. High 45-50, low 29-34.

Sunrise: 6:14. Sunset: 7:18.

Weather and comics, D5-6.

Obituaries, C9.

Florida topped Houston to take the NCAA men's basketball title in a stunning comeback, 65-63. C1.

Mike Kennealy, an aide to former governor Charlie Baker, became the first Republican to launch a campaign to challenge Governor Maura Healey. B1.

President Trump said the United States would enter "direct" talks with Iran on its nuclear program. A4.

One of a string of Israeli strikes in Gaza hits near a charity kitchen. A3.

No pause, no relief, Trump vows as tariffs batter markets

ASHLEE REZIN/CHICAGO SUN-TIMES VIA AP

It was another day of chaos in equities and commodities markets around the world, including in the S&P options pit in Chicago.

President threatens to hit back at China with stunning 104 percent levies

By Tony Romm and Ana Swanson

NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — President Trump said Monday he does not plan to pause a slate of expansive tariffs set to take effect later this week, as he threatened to subject Chinese imports to a staggering 104 percent tax in a bid to ward off retaliation by Beijing and other powers.

Trump issued his warning on a day when the White House once again found itself on the defensive for its spiraling global trade war. But the president insisted he remained unbowed by the widening range of governments pleading for relief and the markets convulsing anew over the chaos and confusion.

"We're not looking at that," Trump said, when asked about a possible pause on his tariffs. "We're going to have one shot at this and no other president is going to do what I'm doing."

Trump began the day by drawing new battle lines over his so-called reciprocal tariffs, which he plans to impose on certain countries after midnight Wednesday. The taxes, which can reach as high as 46 percent for some nations, will snap into effect just days after the president imposed a minimum 10 percent levy on nearly every US trading partner.

Trump specifically targeted China, which announced last week it would match the United States by imposing a retaliatory 34 percent tax on imports from the United

TARIFFS, Page A6

Court allows Venezuelan deportations

By Abbie VanSickle

NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court ruled Monday night that the Trump administration could continue to deport Venezuelan migrants based on a wartime powers act for now, overturning a lower court that had put a temporary stop to the deportations.

The decision marks a victory for the Trump administration, although the ruling is narrow and focused on the proper venue for the cases, rather than on the administration's use of a centuries-old law to justify its decision to send planeloads of Venezuelans to El Salvador with little to no due process.

The justices did not address the question of whether the Trump administration improperly categorized the Venezuelans as deportable under the Alien Enemies Act, finding the migrants had improperly challenged their deportations in Washington, D.C. The justices determined that the migrants should have raised challenges in Texas, where they were being held.

"The detainees are confined in Texas, so

DEPORT, Page A10

In documentary, Sox's Duran reveals he tried to take own life

By Peter Abraham

GLOBE STAFF

Despondent over his play on the field and the harsh reaction of some fans, Red Sox outfielder Jarren Duran attempted to take his own life during the 2022 season.

The startling admission came during a Netflix documentary that will be released Tuesday.

In the fourth episode of "The Clubhouse: A Year With the Red Sox," Duran described trying to shoot himself with a rifle, but the weapon did not discharge.

After a series of biographical highlights, the episode focused on the errors and other mistakes Duran made in 2022.

"It honestly felt like a dark cloud over me," Duran said, "because it's so easy to look past the positive things for me and to grab onto the negative things."

"I would think every day, 'I can't [expletive] do this,'" he said. "I couldn't deal with telling myself how much I sucked every [expletive] day. Like I was already hearing it from fans and, like, what they say to me. It's like, I haven't told myself 10 times worse than that in

DURAN, Page C2

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

Boston Red Sox outfielder Jarren Duran celebrated his double during the third inning at Fenway Park Monday night.

At the center of climate studies, cuts and threats shake scientists

Once a beacon, Woods Hole now a bull's-eye of federal ax

By Erin Douglas

GLOBE STAFF

WOODS HOLE — An unease has settled over this small-town community of scientists lately like the fog that crept across the upper Cape on a recent March morning.

It's difficult to see around the bend: Will the scientists still have a job in the coming weeks? Will their life's work be halted? Will their colleagues flee abroad, seeking funds and political support for their research?

"Science in Woods Hole is most definitely under threat," said Max Holmes, president of Woodwell Climate Research Center.

"We don't know what the future holds, but we're not going to just sit back and wait," Holmes said. "We're going to use our voice."

Right now, that voice is a lonely one. The very fact that Holmes is still willing to speak publicly about the Trump administration's economic impact is unusual here, where several climate research institutions depend on federal dollars to function.

Of all the places vulnerable to federal funding cuts to the sciences, Woods Hole may be one of the

WOODS HOLE, Page A5

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 307, NO. 98

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4