Bill pressures firms to spy on 'inappropriate' conversations

RAYNER TO PUT 'BANTER POLICE' IN YOUR OFFICE

EXCLUSIVE

By Glen Owen

POLITICAL EDITOR

ANGELA Rayner has been accused of plotting to censor workplace banter by deploying a network of spies in businesses across the country.

Under new laws drawn up by the Deputy Prime Minister, firms will be pressured into bankrolling 'diversity officers', whose jobs would include protecting staff from the content of overheard conversations.

Last night, the Tories warned that the so-called 'banter police' would have a 'chilling effect' on businesses already struggling under the weight of high taxes and excess regulation under Labour.

Under Ms Rayner's Employment Rights Bill, employers must try to protect their staff from harassment by third parties. It means, for
