NOW CHINA IS HANDED ACCESS TO NHS MEDICAL RECORDS

Data from 500,000 GP patient files available to Chinese researchers despite security fears

CHINESE researchers will be granted access to NHS medical records despite MI5 fears that health data could be misused by Beijing.

Western intelligence agencies have warned that China is amassing troves of sensitive information in a potential threat to national security.

But it could soon get its hands on data from the GP records of half a million UK patients in a move branded 'outrageous' by MPs.

The information is being uploaded to the central database of the UK Biobank, a research hub that makes data available to universities, scientific institutes and private companies.

Analysis suggests one in five successful applications for access come from China.

MI5 has warned that organisations and individuals can be ordered by Chinese intelligence
