

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, APRIL 28, 2025

Sister cities, divided by more than a river

Windsor and Detroit have long been united economically; Trump, tariffs sever that bond

By Jim Puzzanghera
GLOBE STAFF

WINDSOR, Ontario — The annual fund-raising auction for the Children’s Treatment Centre of Chatham-Kent this month was off to a fantastic start. A 42-year-old bottle of Canadian whiskey that auctioneer Greg Hetherington figured would sell for $750 went for $1,500. A $1,000 local shopping spree sold for $1,700.

“Oh, this is awesome,” Hetherington, owner of a local radio station, said he thought after the first two items. “We are rocking now.”

Then came the next item: four court-side seats at a Detroit Pistons game.

Normally, those would be a major attraction for the 145 well-heeled attendees who ponied up $750 each to attend the auction and raise money for a worthy cause. The Pistons, who play a short drive away, are the local NBA team. And for decades, residents in this finger of sprawling Ontario have thought nothing of making the quick trip from Windsor across the river that separates Canada from the United States to attend a sporting event, go shopping, or have dinner in Detroit.

Despite the border, the two cities have had a symbiotic relationship, tied tightly together for decades by the major auto industry presence on both sides of the Detroit River.

Then President Trump stormed into office in January, levying tariffs against Canada and suggesting it should become

CANADA, Page A6

AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

$323 million

about the amount in goods carried daily over the Ambassador Bridge connecting Windsor to Detroit — the busiest border crossing in North America.

‘That’s something he never got over. It really messed up his head.’

ALICE BALL, son was put in a holding cell when he was 10

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

Jinazean Ball, in his Worcester home, was arrested and placed in a holding cell after a scuffle in elementary school.

‘THIS IS NOT A GOOD TRAJECTORY’

Juvenile detention reaches its highest level since 2018

By Dan Glaun
GLOBE STAFF

The number of Massachusetts youth held in juvenile detention has increased for the third consecutive year, disproportionately affecting Black and Hispanic kids, according to a new state report.

The spike threatens to undermine decades of effort to undo the increases in detention seen during the 1990s, when fears of a youth crime wave prompted legislation that increased penalties for young defendants, according to juvenile justice advocates. They argue that detaining young people at an early age will forever link them to the criminal justice system without giving them the support and resources they need to reform themselves.

The recent increases in detentions are driven largely by pretrial detention for low-level charges, according to the report by the state Juvenile Justice Policy and Data Board.

“This is not a good trajectory,” said Leon Smith, executive director of the Boston-based advocacy group Citizens for Juvenile Justice. “I remember growing up [at a time] when every fight on the playground was not considered a police matter.”

The harsh approach of the 1990s had a profound effect on area youth and their families, according to advocates, researchers, and personal accounts. Worcester native Jinazean Ball was in fourth grade the first time he was locked up, his mother, Alice Ball, said in an interview. Jinazean Ball, now 37, spent

DETENTION, Page A7

Russia continues to pound Ukraine

Sweeping airstrikes follow Zelensky-Trump talks; Moscow says Kursk retaken

By Volodymyr Yurchuk and Elise Morton
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KYIV — Russia launched a sweeping drone assault and airstrikes across Ukraine early Sunday, killing at least four people, officials said, after President Trump cast doubt over Russian President Vladimir Putin’s willingness to end the war.

Three people died and four were wounded in airstrikes on Kostyantynivka in the Donetsk region of eastern Ukraine, the regional prosecutor’s office said. Another person died and a 14-year-old girl was wounded in a drone attack on the city of Pavlohrad in the Dnipropetrovsk region, which was hit for the third consecutive night, Governor Serhii Lysak said.

The attacks came hours after Russia claimed to have regained control over the remaining parts of the Kursk region that Ukrainian forces seized in a surprise incursion in August. Ukrainian officials said the fighting in Kursk was still ongoing.

Trump said Saturday he doubts Putin wants to end the more than 3-year-old war, expressing new skepticism a peace deal can be reached soon. Only a day earlier, Trump had said Ukraine and Russia were “very close to a deal.”

“There was no reason for Putin to be shooting missiles into civilian areas, cities and towns, over

UKRAINE, Page A10

Nonprofits adrift, stuck in vortex of cuts

Uncertainty rules; needy will suffer, advocates say

By Julian E.J. Sorapuru
GLOBE STAFF

Kevin Dean hasn’t slept well in a while.

As CEO of the Tennessee Nonprofit Network, he shepherds an organization that provides training, connections, research, and policy insight to 1,800 nonprofit members across the state. Dean prides himself on being the kind of leader who inspires hope. But since President Trump returned to office, Dean has been grasping at straws.

“I’m having these coffee meetings with people who are just absolutely beside themselves about what’s happening and what’s to come. I think they’re looking to us for some optimism and I don’t have much to give them, honestly,” he said. “I can’t tell them, ‘Tomorrow is going to be better than today,’ and that breaks my heart.”

Much like public institutions and for-profit companies, nonprofits find themselves under the Trump administration’s ideological microscope. Amid ongoing court battles weighing the legality of White House directives around federal funding, many nonprofits are stuck in a state of limbo, unsure whether they will be forced to cut pro-

NONPROFITS, Page A7

Evolutionary thinking on Revolutionary War

Museums offer untold stories of women, Black patriots

By Tiana Woodard
GLOBE STAFF

CONCORD — Inside one of Concord Museum’s dimly lit gallery rooms, a different story of the American Revolution is taking shape.

Embroidered samplers, used for work such as cross-stitching, showcase how women and children might have occupied their time 250 years ago in the era of the battle on Lexington Green. An intricate, purple-hued wampum choker stands near Old World glassware. Silhouettes of enslaved people are projected beside 18th century furniture — coveted pieces their enslavers owned, along with them.

“It’s been a really exciting opportunity to look at our collection with fresh eyes,” said Reed Gochberg, Concord Museum’s assistant curator and director of exhibitions. “This is an opportunity to bring their stories into the room, and think about the proximity between many people who were experiencing these events at the same time.”

REVOLUTION, Page A10

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

An exhibit at the Concord Museum includes silhouettes of people who were enslaved before the Revolutionary War but were then freed.

Cheery blossoms

Monday: Sunny, beautiful.
High 71-76, low 59-65.

Tuesday: More sun.
High 73-78, low 53-58.

Sunrise: 5:43. Sunset: 7:40.

Weather and comics, D4-5.
Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 118

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

Jayson Tatum scored 37 points, leading the Celtics over the Magic 107-98 in Orlando to take a 3-1 lead in the first-round series which now goes back to Boston. C1.

The Trump administration has shifted its sights toward unraveling environmental policies many states have adopted. B1.

Republican lawmakers across the country are pushing their states to use more taxpayer dollars to pay for private school tuitions and homeschooling expenses. A2.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com