

Raids by ICE stir anger in San Diego

Agents with assault rifles detain restaurant workers and use flash grenades on a protest.

By RUBEN VIVES

Tensions remain high in San Diego after last week's Immigration and Customs Enforcement work raids at two Italian restaurants that ended with federal agents using flash-bang grenades against residents protesting the operations. Elected officials reacted with outrage.

The incidents occurred Friday when heavily armed ICE and Homeland Security Investigations agents executed search warrants at Buona Forchetta and Enoteca Buona Forchetta in South Park, a serene and tree-lined neighborhood with popular restaurants, according to immigration and city officials.

It was one of the more dramatic shows of force by federal immigration officials in California as the Trump administration vowed mass deportations of those in this country illegally. Last week, officials announced a raid at an L.A.-area underground nightclub that ended with the arrests of 36 Chinese and Taiwanese citizens suspected of being in the country illegally. In April, an est[See Raids, A6]

THE WIDE SHOT

It's alive: The PG family movie

Parents and kids have returned to theaters in full force, easing fears amid streaming push.

By RYAN FAUGHNDER

The PG rating has made a major comeback in Hollywood.

It's strange to remember now, but during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic — when studios were sending many of their family-friendly movies straight to streaming services — there were serious conversations in the movie business about whether youngsters and their parents would ever return to theaters in full force.

Streaming was just too convenient and affordable, compared with a Saturday outing of two parents and 2 ½ kids, the logic went.

But in recent years, the family audience has proved to be a bulwark for the theatrical movie business.

Disney's live-action "Lilo & Stitch" topped the domestic box office again last weekend with $63 million in ticket sales, for a total of $280 million so far. It beat the latest "Mission: Impossible" and the new "Karate Kid: Legends," both rated PG-13. As of Sunday, "Lilo & Stitch" had crossed $610 mil[See PG films, A10]

FLOWERS and signs were left at Buona Forchetta in San Diego on Monday, the site of an ICE raid last week.

ALEJANDRO TAMAYO San Diego Union-Tribune

Regulators may OK phaseout of gas-run appliances in SoCal

By HAYLEY SMITH

Southern California's air quality regulators are set to vote this week on new rules aimed at phasing out the sale of gas-powered furnaces and water heaters in the region.

The South Coast Air Quality Management District, or AQMD, which covers all of Orange County and large swaths of Los Angeles, Riverside and San Bernardino counties, is scheduled to vote Friday on two proposed regulations designed to limit emissions of nitrogen oxides, or NOx — the key pollutants that form smog.

If approved, the AQMD's Proposed Amended Rules 1111 and 1121 would set zero-emission sales targets for manufacturers, distributors and installers of the appliances beginning in 2027. The targets ramp up over time, beginning with a 30% sales target the first year, increasing to [See Gas, A10]

BASTIEN INZAURRALDE AFP/Getty Images

PLUMBING company workers Angel Gomez, left, and Franes Menendez remove a gas water heater from a home in Washington last year.

COLUMN ONE

A 'robotic grampa' at the happiest place? Sad

Worried it will ding Walt Disney's legacy, granddaughter Joanna Miller takes a stand against the park's upcoming animatronic

By Todd Martens

Joanna Miller was 10 — no, "10 and three-quarters," she clarifies — when she lost her grandfather. Even then, in December 1966, she shared him with the world.

For Miller's granddad was Walt Disney, a name that would emblazon one of the largest entertainment conglomerates in the world, and come to signify uniquely American storytelling, family-friendly optimism and the creation of the modern theme park. Front-page stories across the globe announced his death, hailing him as a "world enchanter," "amusement king" and "wizard of fantasy."

But to Miller, he was just "grampa."

She peppers stories about Disney in her conversations, often going down tangents as she recalls heartwarming moments. Such as the Christmas season when Disney, despite having access to Hollywood's most renown artists, put Miller's drawings on a holiday card. "The bad art we were doing when we were 6 years old? He treated them like they were great works," she says.

She pauses, a tear forming in her eye. "He was just the greatest guy. The best guy."

Miller is, to put it mildly, protective of Disney. So is Walt Disney Co., and as Disneyland Resort's 70th anniversary in July approaches, both share a goal — to remind audiences of the man behind the corporate name. Last fall the company announced that an audio-animatronic of Disney would grace the opera house on Main Street, [See Disney, A8]

GENE LESTER Getty Images

WALT DISNEY sits with his grandson in front of the Magic Kingdom's castle.

Hate crime suspect's kin held

Agents detain relatives of a man charged in an attack on Colorado marchers. NATION, A5

Pressure to bar trans athletes

Justice Department issues a warning to school districts. CALIFORNIA, B1

L.A. teen sues K-pop agency

Former member of a girl group says work environment was abusive. BUSINESS, A9

Weather

Partly sunny. L.A. Basin: 74/59. B6

Markets A11
Opinion Voices A12

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

Every story. Every section. Every feature.
Subscribers get unlimited app access. Download now.

