

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 2025

‘Beautiful’ bill is an ‘abomination,’ Musk chides

Points to possible impact on deficit in latest sign of a rift with Trump

By Kate Conger, Michael Gold, and Jonathan Swan

NEW YORK TIMES

Elon Musk lashed out Tuesday against the far-reaching Republican bill intended to enact President Trump’s domestic policy agenda, posting on X that it is a “disgusting abomination” and telling House members who voted for it: “You know you did wrong.”

The tech billionaire criticized the bill, one of Trump’s top priorities, in a series of about 10 posts. In them, Musk reshared commentary from lawmakers including Republican Senators Rand Paul of Kentucky and Mike Lee of Utah, both of whom had sided with him in opposing the rising deficit.

“I’m sorry, but I just can’t stand it anymore,” Musk wrote on X. He called the domestic policy bill “massive, outrageous, pork-filled,” adding that it would “massively increase the already gigantic budget deficit” and that “Congress is making America bankrupt.”

He did not target any specific members of Congress, but hinted that he might support efforts to unseat those who backed the bill in the 2026 midterm elections. “In November next year, we fire all politicians who betrayed the American people,” he wrote.

MUSK, Page A7

Delicately, Harvard ramps up lobbying

Aims to cover all bases in battle with Trump

By Sam Brodey

GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — Eleven days before Donald Trump’s second inauguration, Harvard University filed paperwork with Congress disclosing that it had hired Brian Ballard — a Republican powerbroker with deep ties to the incoming president — to lobby on its behalf in the capital. It turned out to be a prescient decision.

Just months later, Harvard is locked in a far-reaching battle with Trump, who is trying to pull billions of dollars in federal funding and is fighting to block foreign students from enrolling after the university refused to comply with his demands to, among other things, shut diversity-related programs and tackle antisemitism on campus the way his administration wanted.

While Harvard is primarily fighting back through the courts, behind the scenes it is deploying Washington lobbying finesse— a time-honored strategy — as it navigates the fraught conflict with Trump, who has nevertheless charged ahead with his campaign to force Harvard into compliance.

The university’s hiring of Ballard, perhaps the most sought-after lobbyist in Trump’s Washington, was a clear early indicator of its strategy. A former lobbyist for the Trump Orga-

LOBBYISTS, Page A7

For local Jews, ‘it’s a very scary time’

‘When you see people cheering against us, that shows where the wind is blowing.’

ELIRAN BORAKS, who was born in Israel

Colorado attack sets off more alarms

By Danny McDonald and Billy Baker

GLOBE STAFF

and Nathan Metcalf

GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

Local rabbis and Jewish residents are reacting with shock and horror to a climate of increasing antisemitic violence across the nation in the wake of the Israel-Gaza war, with the latest incident coming Sunday at a demonstration in Colorado in which a dozen people were injured.

“In what is becoming a terrifying pattern for American Jews, we are once again shocked, saddened, and outraged at a ‘targeted terror attack’ in Boulder, Colorado,” the Boston-based Combined Jewish Philanthropies said in a statement.

The man accused of lobbying incendiary devices at marchers in support of the remaining Israeli hostages still in captivity, Mohamed Sabry Soliman, faces hate crime charges in federal court and attempted murder and other charges in state court. And on Tuesday, federal immigration authorities took Soliman’s wife and five children into custody, officials said (story, A6). Federal officials are investigating whether his family knew about his plan, Secretary of Homeland Security Kristi Noem said in a

ATTACK, Page A6

Finding somewhere else to live free

N.H. restrictions on care for transgender kids have some families ready to move out

PHOTOS BY BRETT PHELPS FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Rosie Emrich has considered leaving Hooksett, N.H., because she wants her 8-year-old to continue getting puberty blockers.

By Amanda Gokee

GLOBE STAFF

CONCORD, N.H. — When New Hampshire lawmakers began seriously considering a bill banning gender-affirming care this year, Katie Remesch started preparing to leave the home she’s lived in for five years.

In May, Remesch closed on a house just over the border in Massachusetts. She calls it her “plan B” house, in case her family needs to leave quickly.

“We can’t stay if we can’t get gender-affirming health care,” said Remesch, who has two young children, one who is transgender.

Transgender issues have become a dominating topic in recent years in national and local politics, with legislative proposals targeting transgender people dramatically increasing, including in New Hampshire. Now, more families here are considering leaving everything they know to find a safe place for their transgender relatives.

At least two New Hampshire families with transgender children told the Globe they have already moved to states they believe will preserve access to transgender health care, while a handful of others said they are preparing to uproot their lives.

Emrich and her children made signs for Transgender Awareness Week.

Moving to another state, however, might not be a permanent solution. Tucked into the budget bill passed in May by GOP lawmakers in the US House were sweeping provisions to strip gender-affirming care from almost all transgender Americans.

Remesch said her family would consider leaving the United States if such proposals prevail.

“Do we go to Europe or Canada or Mexico? Honestly, those are all on the list,” she said.

Other families have already left New Hampshire behind.

Last year, out of concern for their transgender daughter, Abi and Jacob Maxwell moved their family from New Hampshire to California just before then-governor Chris Sununu signed a trio of bills placing restrictions on LGBTQ+ people, their health care, and education.

“We knew what was coming,” Abi Maxwell said. “It was taking years off our lives and we knew we had to get out.”

Maxwell said she thought California

TRANSGENDER, Page A10

IN THEIR THOUGHTS

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

At Tuesday night’s MIAA Division 1 second-round tournament volleyball game, teammates and fans honored Milford’s Marcelo Gomes da Silva, who was detained by ICE on his way to practice. C1.

Family of boy injured by bus sues provider of BPS drivers

Transdev has had many issues

By John Hilliard

GLOBE STAFF

The family of an 8-year-old boy who was severely injured by a Boston Public Schools bus driver who lost control of his vehicle and struck him outside a school is suing Boston’s transportation contractor Transdev for gross negligence and systemic safety failures, according to a complaint filed Tuesday in Suffolk Superior Court.

The crash, which occurred in December outside the Curley K-8 Lower School in Jamaica Plain, echoes the horrific incident several weeks ago in Hyde Park, when a 5-year-old was run over and killed by a bus driver. The lawsuit also comes as Boston officials have launched an investigation of Transdev, which has faced more than a dozen personal injury claims in Boston over the last decade.

Video of the Jamaica Plain crash shows the driver of the school bus asleep at the wheel just moments before abruptly waking and starting the bus during dismissal, when large numbers of students and staff were outside the Curley school. Almost immediately, the bus swerved onto the sidewalk and hit the boy and a

BUS, Page A10

A tattoo tied to white supremacist groups is visible on a federal agent in the Martha’s Vineyard immigration raid. B1.

Members of Donald Trump’s inner circle are filling multiple posts. A2.

There are some things you should know if you’re traveling abroad this summer. B5.

Devra First lists 15 restaurants in Greater Boston to enjoy during dark times. G1.

Double up

Wednesday: Much hotter. High 83-88. Low 62-67.

Thursday: More of the same. High 82-87. Low 67-72.

Sunrise: 5:09 Sunset: 8:17

Weather and Comics, G6-7. Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 155

*

Suggested retail price $4.00

