As Labour tries to blame weather for surge in crossings, new figures tell another story

THE EVIDENCE RWANDA PLAN DID DETER SMALL BOATS

LABOUR has blamed migrant crossings on the weather even after releasing data indicating the Rwanda scheme was deterring arrivals.

The Home Office published figures on the number of so-called 'red days' which saw calm conditions in the Channel.

But Labour faced ridicule after claiming the good weather 'tended to coincide with an increase in the number of overall arrivals'. In fact, the official figures also showed migrant numbers were far lower when the Rwanda returns scheme seemed imminent.

Shadow Home Secretary Chris Philp said: 'This analysis proves the Rwanda removals plan was having a deterrent effect in the weeks before
