AI radars step up monitoring Dubai roads

Advanced radars capable of detecting a range of violations

DUBAI
BY AGHADDIR ALI

Besides speeding and running red lights to making unauthorised turns and failing to give way to pedestrians, Dubai's AI-powered radar systems are now also tracking infractions such as jaywalking and excessive vehicle noise. Dubai Police yesterday unveiled a list of offences that radars and cameras placed in high-risk areas prone to accidents and violations can monitor, along with their fines, vehicle impoundment periods, and black points.

The AI detection system uses multiple cameras, some capturing images and others analysing video feeds. If a violation occurs, supporting evidence — including images, sound, or short video clips — is recorded and reviewed by authorities.

The evidence allows authorities to easily verify the occurrence of a traffic violation. The system, using computer vision, automatically analyses video feeds, sending relevant data, such as video clips and images, to the authorities.

In cases involving window tint violations, cameras are used to determine if the tint is too dark, obstructing the view into the vehicle.
