

Netanyahu agrees to Trump’s Gaza plan

Hamas official says it will review proposal, which calls for its disarmament

BY MICHAEL BIRNBAUM AND EMILY DAVIES

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu agreed Monday to a U.S.-backed deal to end the nearly two years of war in Gaza amid a fresh push by President Donald Trump, but obstacles to peace remained amid questions about whether Hamas would also sign on.

Israeli sign-off was a significant moment in the twisting conflict, which has been marked by deals and diplomatic initiatives that have quickly fallen apart. The initiative agreed to Monday was notable because it appeared to have high-level Israeli buy-in along with assent from neighboring Arab nations.

But it remained unclear whether Hamas would agree to a deal that would lead to its disarmament and potential exile from Gaza. Nor was it clear that Netanyahu could square his sharp opposition to Palestinian statehood with a plan that on paper could go down that road.

Trump, speaking after more than two hours of meetings at the White House, betrayed little of that caution, declaring with no evidence that the deal was likely to result not just in peace in Gaza but a comprehensive restructuring of “thousands” of years of Middle Eastern relations.

Trump called it “a beautiful day, potentially one of the great days ever in civilization,” speaking alongside Netanyahu at the White House. The deal, which the White House published Monday, foresees

SEE PEACE DEAL ON A11

LALLY WEYMOUTH 1943-2025

Journalist from Graham family with glitz and grit

BY HARRISON SMITH

Lally Weymouth, a roving journalist and high-society fixture who interviewed diplomats, dictators and other world leaders for The Washington Post and Newsweek — publications that her family, the Gramhams, owned for decades — died Sept. 29 at her home in Manhattan. She was 82.

The cause was pancreatic cancer, said her daughter Katharine Weymouth.

As the granddaughter, daughter, sister and mother of five Washington Post publishers, Ms. Weymouth moved in social circles that helped shape American media and government, from the Camelot age of John F. Kennedy to the dawn of the Trump era more than 50 years later.

As a young girl, she attempted to teach her mother, Katharine Graham, the twist in preparation for dance parties at the White House. She later swapped stories about her father, Philip L.

SEE WEYMOUTH ON A20

Lally Weymouth hailed from the Graham family that for decades owned The Washington Post.

MAXINE WALLACE/THE WASHINGTON POST

From left, Office of Management and Budget Director Russell Vought, House Speaker Mike Johnson (R-Louisiana), Senate Majority Leader John Thune (R-South Dakota) and Vice President JD Vance talk to reporters about the possibility of a government shutdown.

Tony Blair’s blueprint: The former British prime minister, who has long grappled with Mideast issues, emerges as a key player on postwar Gaza. A12

Military brass question Hegseth’s strategy

BY NOAH ROBERTSON, TARA COPP, ALEX HORTON AND DAN LAMOTHE

Military leaders have raised serious concerns about the Trump administration’s forthcoming defense strategy, exposing a divide between the Pentagon’s political and uniformed leadership as Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth summons top brass to a highly unusual summit in Virginia on Tuesday, according to eight current and former officials.

The critiques from multiple top officers, including Gen. Dan Caine, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, come as Hegseth reorders U.S. military priorities — centering the Pentagon on perceived threats to the homeland,

Shift in priorities for armed forces draws unusual level of criticism narrowing U.S. competition with China, and downplaying America’s role in Europe and Africa.

President Donald Trump will attend the abrupt gathering of generals and admirals at Marine Corps Base Quantico, where Hegseth is expected to deliver remarks on military standards and the “warrior ethos,” even as uniformed leaders fear mass firings or a drastic reorganization of the combatant command structure and the military hierarchy.

The debate over the National Defense Strategy — the Pentagon’s primary guide for how it prioritizes resources and positions U.S. forces around the world — is the latest challenge for top military officials navigating the Trump administration’s unorthodox approach to the armed forces.

People familiar with the editing process, who like others spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe sensitive deliberations, described a growing sense of frustration with a plan they consider myopic and potentially irrelevant, given the president’s highly personal and sometimes contradictory approach to foreign policy.

Pentagon spokesperson Sean Parnell declined to comment on the substance of the classified document or whether concerns had been raised in the editing process.

“Secretary Hegseth has tasked the development of a National Defense Strategy that is laser focused on advancing President Trump’s commonsense America First, Peace Through Strength agenda,” Parnell said in a statement. “This process is still ongoing.”

Trump political appointees within the Pentagon’s policy office — including some officials who have previously criticized long-standing American commitments to Europe and the Middle East — drafted the strategy, now in its final edits.

The draft plan has been shared widely with military leaders from the global combatant commands to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, some of whom questioned what its priorities would mean for a force

SEE MILITARY ON A7

Behind Taiwanese party, Chinese espionage — and a gang

Group members at nexus of politics and organized crime help advance Beijing’s interests on the island

BY KATRINA NORTHPROP AND PEI-LIN WU

TAIPEI, TAIWAN — On a muggy afternoon in downtown Taipei, a self-confessed gang member turned political party leader emerged from a black Cadillac Escalade to a cheering crowd. Then Chang An-lo took to the stage to deliver a forceful speech advocating for Taiwan’s unification with China.

“Both sides of the Taiwan Strait are one family,” Chang told the assembled rally. “Only with peaceful unification will Taiwan definitely be safe.”

Chang is the founder of the Chinese Unification Promotion Party (CUPP), which promotes the idea that Taiwan should be absorbed into China. But the CUPP is not just a political party. It is also closely tied to organized crime groups, according to Taiwan’s Interior Ministry.

“To the government, their organization is a gang,” said Sawyer Mars, Taiwan’s deputy interior minister, who is also known as Ma Shyh-yuan, in an interview.

Many leading members of the

SEE TAIWAN ON A14

AN RONG XU/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Chang An-lo, also known as the “White Wolf,” at the Chinese Unification Promotion Party offices in New Taipei City, Taiwan, in May. The CUPP promotes the idea of Taiwan being absorbed into China.

Funding truce still out of reach

NO BREAKTHROUGH IN TRUMP MEETING

Senate has two chances today to avert shutdown

BY RILEY BEGGIN, HANNAH NATANSON AND MARIANNA SOTOMAYOR

A government shutdown early Wednesday looked increasingly likely after a White House meeting with congressional leaders left Democrats and Republicans no closer to agreeing on how to fund continued operations.

“I think we’re headed into a shutdown because the Democrats won’t do the right thing,” Vice President JD Vance said after the meeting.

Democratic leaders said they raised their concerns about health care with President Donald Trump, who Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-New York) said “seemed to understand for the first time the magnitude of this crisis,” and indicated that the two sides remained far apart on an agreement.

Republican leaders signaled that they are unwilling to consider Democrats’ demands, and they urged Senate Democrats to agree to a GOP plan the House has already passed that would extend current funding until Nov. 21.

If Congress fails to approve a funding extension by the end of Tuesday, spending laws will expire and the U.S. government will become a bare-bones operation, continuing only functions

SEE CONGRESS ON A6

Deployment to Portland is riddled with uncertainties

BY JUSTIN JOUVENAL

President Donald Trump’s announcement that he would send troops to Portland, Oregon, and authorize them to use “full force, if necessary” marks a troubling — and possibly illegal — escalation of the president’s campaign to deploy the military to American cities, legal experts said.

Much remains uncertain about Trump’s plans, including whether he would send the National Guard or active-duty troops and what exactly he means by full force.

Early indications suggest that the deployment may be smaller and more limited than the president’s heated rhetoric implied. On Sunday, Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth sent a memo to Oregon Gov. Tina Kotek (D) federalizing 200 members of the state’s National Guard “to protect U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement and other U.S. Government personnel.” The memo cited the same legal authority that Trump used to send 4,000 National Guard troops to Los Angeles in June.

That announcement drew a quick response from Oregon authorities — a suit in federal court by the state and the city of Portland challenging the federalization of the guard as “patently

SEE PORTLAND ON A9

IN THE NEWS

Shooting in Michigan Worshipers helped one another reach safety after a gunman attacked a church, killing four people, officials said. A5

How Vance sealed TikTok deal The vice president worked for months to arrange the creation of a U.S. spin-off of the hugely popular app — and to take the credit. A4

THE NATION Zohran Mamdani aims to solidify his lead in New York’s mayoral race as the president seeks to influence the contest. A2
A legal maneuver could quash appeals from fired federal workers. A3

THE WORLD The NBA is attempting a long-shot comeback in China. A13
As the internet went down across much of Afghanistan, concerns of a crackdown by the Taliban mounted. A13

THE ECONOMY President Donald Trump repeated a threat to impose a tariff on foreign movies and suggested a move on furniture imports. A16
YouTube will pay $24.5 million to settle a lawsuit from Trump over his suspension from the platform in 2021. A17

STYLE At an event known as the Olympics of the art world, some want the U.S. government’s entry to be a monument to MAGA. B1
Bruce Springsteen speaks out about divisiveness and fear at a New York screening of his biopic. B1

SPORTS As the Wizards tip off training camp, the competition for playing time will be much fiercer than it was last season. B7
THE REGION The archbishop of Washington condemned the U.S. immigration crackdown as a “governmental assault.” B13

BUSINESS NEWS.....A16
COMICS.....B4
OBITUARIES.....B15
OPINION PAGES.....A18
TELEVISION.....B6
WORLD NEWS.....A10

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54355

