

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2025

With an end in sight, joy

Israel OK's deal; hostages expected to be freed next week

By Adam Rasgon,
Bilal Shbair, Liam Stack,
and Michael Levenson
NEW YORK TIMES

JERUSALEM — Flashing victory signs, waving flags, and pouring into streets and plazas, Israelis and Palestinians celebrated on Thursday as Israel and Hamas moved toward a cease-fire and a hostage-prisoner exchange that could pave the way for an end to two years of devastating war in the Gaza Strip.

Early Friday, the Israeli government put its stamp of approval on the deal reached by negotiators for Hamas and Israel in Egypt earlier in the week. President Trump said he expected that the Israelis being held hostage in Gaza would be released Monday or Tuesday in exchange for Palestinians imprisoned in Israel.

Trump also said he was planning to travel to Egypt for a ceremonial signing of the agreement, which his administration helped to broker, and to Israel to address its Parliament at the invitation of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

Speaking at a Cabinet meeting on Thursday, Trump described the agreement as a “momentous breakthrough in the

GAZA, Page A6

Protesters in Boston hit with charges of anarchy

Questions raised about criminalizing free speech, and the role of politics

By Sean Cotter and John R. Ellement

GLOBE STAFF

and Truman Dickerson

GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

As the Trump administration threatens to send National Guard troops into big cities to quell disorder, local prosecutors invoked a law from the Red Scare era of American history used to prosecute anarchists to bring new felony charges against protesters arrested after a pro-Palestinian rally in Boston Tuesday turned violent.

Thirteen protesters are charged with violating the “prohibition of the promotion of anarchy,” also referred to in legal documents as “inciting a riot.” A conviction carries a punishment of up to three years in prison. The law also bans a convicted person from working as a teacher or an administrator in public or private schools, even if they did not serve a prison sentence.

Suffolk District Attorney Kevin Hayden, a Boston Democrat, insisted in a statement that the unusual charges were not political in nature, nor were they influenced by the pressure from the Trump administration on Democratic strongholds. The anarchy charges, he said in a statement, re-

FELONIES, Page A10

► Judge partially blocks deployment of National Guard troops to Chicago area. A2.

TOP: DAVID GUTTENFELDER/NEW YORK TIMES; SAHER ALGHORRA/NEW YORK TIMES

Thursday was a day for celebration, at Hostages Square in Tel Aviv (top) and Khan Younis, in the southern Gaza Strip.

Around Boston, mixed emotions on both sides about what's been lost

By Brian MacQuarrie

GLOBE STAFF

and Katie Muchnick

GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

For more than a year, Tamar Davis Galper wasn't sure if her cousin had been killed in Israel or was living as a hostage under Hamas.

It took more than 400 days into the Israel-Hamas war for Davis Galper and her relatives to learn that her cousin, IDF soldier and American citizen Omer Neutra, had been killed during the attacks and his body taken by Hamas.

“These are my cousins, and they deserve to have Omer back home and have a proper burial and be able to mourn him,” said Davis Galper, of Brookline.

Davis Galper is among many Greater Boston residents grappling with a swirl of emotions this week at the idea that the violence and horror of the war in Gaza could soon come to an end. Israel and Hamas agreed to pause fighting in Gaza and release hostages and Palestinian prisoners, but many of the details of the deal were not immediately announced.

“It all feels rather surreal,” said Rabbi Keith Stern, 71, the senior rabbi at Temple Beth Avodah in Newton. “I’ve been burned too many times to allow myself an unrestrained sense of joy.”

If the peace deal doesn't go through, Davis Galper said, her family has “no choice” but to continue fighting for the release of all hostages, living and dead.

“Nothing’s going to give us these two years back and nothing’s going to give us Omer back alive,” she said.

Sammy S. Nabulsi, a Palestinian American

REACTION, Page A6

‘It all feels rather surreal. I’ve been burned too many times to allow myself an unrestrained sense of joy.’

RABBI KEITH STERN

Temple Beth Avodah in Newton

Mike Greenwell, who hit over .300 in his 12 seasons with the Red Sox, died at 62 of thyroid cancer. He was inducted into the team's Hall of Fame in 2008. C1.

Professors, students, and staff at Brown and Dartmouth are urging the schools not to cave to pressure from the Trump administration to sign a “compact.” B1.

Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts has offered buyouts to hundreds of workers amid soaring health care costs and steep losses. B5.

Laszlo Krasznahorkai, a novelist known for dystopian themes, was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature. A3.

The Bruins beat the Blackhawks, 4-3, in the home opener at TD Garden. C1.

Frost-freed

Friday: Sunny, pleasant. High 59-64. Low 47-52.

Saturday: A bit warmer. High 62-67. Low 52-57.

Sunrise: 6:51 Sunset: 6:10

Weather and Comics, G6-7.

Taking the record collection out for a spin

The late Richard Dyer, a former Globe critic, amassed a mountain of vinyl, most of it classical. Now his nephew is finding it a home.

By A.Z. Madonna

GLOBE STAFF

CAMBRIDGE — His furniture is now gone, as are his prized neckties and most everything else possessed by the eminent music critic Richard Dyer, who died last December at 82. One particularly notable thing remains: a colossal monument to Dyer's passion and life's work, his collection of some 20,000 to 30,000 vinyl records.

On shelves throughout the Cambridge condo where he stored most of them — along with issues of Fanfare: The Magazine for Serious Record Collectors and a wall full of reel-to-reel tapes labeled in meticulous handwriting — the records span more than a half-century of recorded music. Some have handwriting on the covers. Some are from distant countries, including the Soviet Union and Japan. The lion's share of the collection is classical, encompassing everything from Hildegard von Bingen to 1980s chamber music,

RECORDS, Page A10

DAVID L. RYAN/ GLOBE STAFF

Stephen Dyer, who is managing his uncle's estate, has scheduled a pay-what-you-can sale of the albums on Saturday and Sunday.

VOL. 308, NO. 102

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

