

A WorldPride milestone in D.C.

ASTRID RIECKEN/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

People gather Saturday in the nation’s capital for the annual WorldPride parade, which kicked off the final days of a three-week festival celebrating the LGBTQ community and marking the city’s 50th anniversary of Pride celebrations. The parade featured a 1,000-foot rainbow flag, more than 300 crooners and a team of cheerleaders. Story, C1

Rampaging militants gain ground in West Africa

BY RACHEL CHASON
AND ADRIÁN BLANCO RAMOS

TUMU, GHANA — In the space of just a few months, the al-Qaeda affiliate has overrun major cities in Burkina Faso and Mali, carried out the deadliest-ever attack on soldiers in Benin and expanded its hard-line Islamist rule across the region. No one knows when its fighters will strike next — or where they plan to stop.

After years spent quietly gaining strength, Jama’at Nusrat al-Islam wal-Muslimin (JNIM) is now the most well-armed militant force in West Africa and

Al-Qaeda affiliate JNIM turns region into a center of Islamist insurgency among the most powerful in the world, according to regional and Western officials, with as many as 6,000 fighters under its command. Local strategies employed to combat JNIM are accelerating its rise, officials and experts say, as atrocities by West African forces have allowed the group to claim the moral high ground and legitimize its growing authority.

The United States has largely pulled back from — or been pushed out — of the fight, leaving in its wake a deepening security vacuum and mounting anxiety over JNIM’s aims and capabilities.

“They’re creating a proto-state that stretches like a belt from western Mali all the way to the borderlands of Benin. ... It is a substantial — even exponential — expansion,” said Hédi Nsaibia, West Africa senior analyst for the Armed Conflict Location & Event Data project, or ACLED, a non-profit research group.

JNIM, along with the rival Islamic State-Sahel Province, has turned the region into an epicenter of Islamist insurgency. The Institute for Economics & Peace’s annual index last year found 51 percent of terrorism deaths worldwide were in the Sahel, a vast, tumultuous region south of the Sahara that spans the breadth of Africa. The chaos ravaging the region has helped military officers seize power in coups — vowing to break with

SEE MILITANTS ON A16

Entry ban: Targeted countries are mired in civil war, other conflict. A10

Before the flameout, the fuse was burning

THE BATTLES THAT SHATTERED AN ALLIANCE

A behind-the-scenes look at the Trump-Musk saga

This article is by Cat Zakrzewski, Natalie Allison, Elizabeth Dwoskin, Jeff Stein and Emily Davies

President Donald Trump was dejected, processing his very public spit with the world’s richest man.

Rattled in the wake of Elon Musk’s public attacks and apparent call for his impeachment, Trump worked the phones, debriefing close confidants and casual acquaintances alike. His former ally was “a big-time drug addict,” Trump said at one point as he tried to make sense of Musk’s behavior, according to a person with knowledge of the call, who like others interviewed for this article spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss sensitive matters.

Musk has acknowledged using ketamine, a powerful anesthetic, which he says was prescribed for him to treat depression. The New York Times recently reported that he was using so much ketamine on the campaign trail that he told people it was affecting his bladder, and he traveled with a pill box with medication with the marking of Adderall. White House officials said that Trump’s concern about Musk’s drug use, stemming in part from media reports, was one factor driving the two men apart.

But the president, who historically hasn’t hesitated to fire off deeply personal, blistering social

SEE FEUD ON A8

Preserving a bridge: Trump advises Vance to take cautious approach. A8
Pumping the brakes: White House signals Trump may dump his Tesla. A15

With his billions, Musk no match in game of power

Dan Balz
THE SUNDAY TAKE

There will be no true winners in the spectacular breakup between President Donald Trump and Elon Musk, two alpha males with enormous egos and a penchant for rhetorical combat — and for excess. To many Americans watching it all, the two deserve each other. But in the end, Musk should know who truly holds the cards, and it’s not him.

The implosion that occurred Thursday was an irresistible spectacle pitting the most powerful person in the world against the richest person in the world. It was made for cable news and social media, and neither could get enough of it. Many Republicans who couldn’t look away were nonetheless alarmed at the potential fallout.

SEE THE SUNDAY TAKE ON A2

Threat launches a new campaign for SpaceX rival

BY CHRISTIAN DAVENPORT

NASA and Pentagon officials moved swiftly this past week to urge competitors to Elon Musk’s SpaceX to more quickly develop alternative rockets and spacecraft after President Donald Trump threatened to cancel Space X’s contracts and Musk’s defiant response.

Government officials were especially stunned after Musk responded to Trump with a salvo of his own: SpaceX would stop flying its Dragon spacecraft, a move that would leave the space agency with no way to transport its astronauts to the International Space Station.

Musk later recanted his threat. But it alarmed officials at NASA, which entrusts SpaceX with the lives of its astronauts, and at the

SEE SPACEX ON A9

Starlink: White House ignored fears over security breaches. A6

D.C. apartments for the poor exceeding $1 million to build

Development costs result in fewer affordable units at time of urgent need

BY STEVE THOMPSON

In the heart of D.C., along a narrow street in the affluent Adams Morgan neighborhood, a scaffolding rises above the sidewalk near increasingly expensive homes.

The 52-unit building under construction will house people making far below the area’s median income. Half will be newly released from incarceration.

But the building’s development cost is enough to make the neighborhood’s wealthier residents blink: $1.2 million per apartment.

That tab will be picked up in large part by taxpayers, most of whom could not afford to live in such a place. It’s an example of a trend in expensive cities across the nation, including San Francisco and Chicago, where costs to house the poor are approaching and at times exceeding $1 million per unit — resulting in fewer affordable housing units being built at a time of urgent need, housing experts say.

The D.C. building, called Ontario Place, will include a rooftop aquaponics farm to produce fresh fruits and vegetables for its tenants, whose rents will be capped at well below market rates. Two nearby buildings by the same developer, D.C. nonprofit Jubilee Housing, have run up a development price tag of $1.3 million for each of 50 apartments, city records show. The pair of buildings, collectively dubbed EucKal (for their locations on Euclid Street and Kalorama Road), were funded largely by local and federal tax credits, the city’s Housing Production Trust Fund and the promise of future revenue from city-funded housing vouchers, records show.

Jim Knight, Jubilee’s president and CEO, declined to be interviewed about the buildings’ costs but said in a statement that they should be measured against their impact on the lives of the tenants.

“Placing deeply affordable housing in high opportunity neighborhoods with on site and nearby programs and services helps harness the power of zip code,” Jubilee said in the statement. The location promotes tenants’ success by connecting them to high-performing schools, trans-

SEE HOUSING ON A24

STEPHANIE LECOQ/REUTERS

Glory for Gauff

Coco Gauff defeated Aryna Sabalenka in three sets Saturday to become the first American — among the women and men — to win a French Open singles title since 2015. More in Sports, D1

Trump orders Guard into L.A. amid protests over ICE raids

BY MAEVE RESTON
AND EMILY DAVIES

LOS ANGELES — President Donald Trump on Saturday ordered the California National Guard to Los Angeles to intervene in protests of immigration sweeps, a move condemned by California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D).

Trump border czar Tom Homan said authorities were mobilizing “to address violence and destruction” near locations that were raided Saturday, in an interview on Fox News.

A Los Angeles Sheriff’s Department spokesperson said that authorities responded as the crowd gathered “solely for traffic and crowd control management” and that sheriff’s deputies were not involved in any federal law enforcement operations. The sheriff’s department would not confirm how many arrests had occurred Saturday evening.

The White House move to activate the National Guard marks a

SEE NATIONAL GUARD ON A18

Federal funding: Officials consider slashing money for California. A2

METRO
Five Proud Boys leaders sue Justice Department over Jan. 6 prosecutions.

SPORTS
Trump vs. Harvard leaves international athletes scrambling for answers.

ARTS & STYLE
Cynthia Nixon transports you to New York’s chic present and storied past.

BOOK WORLD
America’s “spot news novelist” takes on the Trump era in Spokane.

BUSINESS
Five AI bots took our reading test. None scored better than a D+.

TRAVEL
Ready for takeoff: Your next 5K run could be on an airport tarmac.

COMICS.....INSERT
OBITUARIES.....C5
OPINION PAGES.....A19
WORLD NEWS.....A14

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post / Year 148, No. 54241

