Gulf Oil Tops Prewar Flow

U.S.-backed shipping system aids tankers, but traders worry fighting could restart

*By Benoit Faucon, Georgi Kantchev and Rebecca Feng

Persian Gulf oil exports have surpassed prewar levels, as an improvised shipping system under U.S. protection is helping tankers move oil through one of Iran's fiercest waves of attacks in the Strait of Hormuz.

Middle East oil flows, including shipments through Hormuz and alternative routes, averaged more than 24 million barrels a day in the week through Oct. 18, surpassing prewar levels of 23.3 million, according to ship tracker Kpler.

Preliminary figures show Hormuz oil flows, including offshore transfers in the Gulf of Oman, came to around 14 million barrels a day on average for the same period, or 82% of prewar levels.

Oil prices remain high, and benchmark Brent crude has risen in recent days to around $108 a barrel on Tuesday. Traders are concerned the improvement in Hormuz might not be sustainable, particularly if fighting breaks out again. Thinning global inventories leave little margin for error. The operation is also expensive, costs that ultimately flow through to con-

Musk Ordered Starlink Slowdown

WASHINGTON—Elon Musk ordered the slowdown of a military-grade version of Starlink relied on by Ukraine, a decision that sparked panic in Kyiv and confusion inside the Trump administration, U.S. officials and people familiar with the matter said.

Both Musk and President Trump have expressed anger at Ukraine for attacking Russian diesel refineries in recent weeks, which the president blames for high energy prices. Last week, Musk capped the speeds at which Ukrainian hardware could stay connected to the satellite-based network, the people said, rendering some offensive drones and interceptor drones virtually useless.

Musk and Trump discussed the Starlink decision in a call soon after the slowdown became public, while the president was campaigning last week for Republican candidates in the midterm elections, two of the people said. One of the people also claimed Musk and Trump discussed the matter before the decision to throttle Starlink.

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky's public complaints—namely, that Ukrainians could die if the unrestricted service wasn't restored—led to widespread confusion about who ordered the slowdown, and to an informal investigation inside the White House.

During the uproar, SpaceX representatives called White House counterparts seeking a unified understanding and subsequent message that the company and Trump administration coordinated ahead of Musk's directive, the people said.

Musk himself posted on X hours after the slowdown became public, "Any limits on speed or usage are decided by the US military and ultimately POTUS," using the acronym for president of the United States. Trump said Monday that he didn't know who was responsible for the Starlink slowdown, "but I would like to find out."

Trump Dangles Cash to Woo Voters

By Marianne LeVine And Natalie Andrews

A $5,000 check for every U.S. adult. An $8 billion bailout for farmers. $90 payments for seniors.

President Trump is relying on a new strategy to salvage Republican seats in midterm elections: promising an array of financial benefits to Americans, some of which he said he would only deliver if his party defies the polls and keeps control of Congress.

The president kicked off his campaign to put cash in the pockets of voters during Republicans' midterm convention in September, when he announced a $1 trillion proposal to send $5,000 to each adult citizen—if the GOP holds on to its congressional majority. Since then, Trump has sent $90 to Medicare recipients to offset premiums and $500 checks to nearly a million people for what the administration called excessive fees under the Affordable Care Act.

On Monday, Trump said he would send $8 billion in direct payments to U.S. farmers, some of whom have soured on the president amid his tariffs and as prices for diesel, gasoline and fertilizer have risen since his war with Iran. And on Tuesday, the president announced a new program that would provide as much as $30,000 to Americans if they report a tip about government fraud.

At an election rally in Greenville, N.C., on Tuesday evening, Trump said that if Republicans keep their majorities, he would push to fast-track claims that veterans have brought against the U.S. over contaminated water at Camp Lejeune, a Marine Corps base in the state.

Anthropic Discloses Red-Hot Growth, Big Risks

By Anissa Gardizy

Anthropic is generating breakneck revenue growth but faces a long list of risks that include a narrow customer base and uncertain access to much-needed computing power as it prepares for a mega-IPO, according to new disclosures.

The company has signaled it could potentially spend $750 billion in the coming years on obtaining more computing capacity, including deals it is still negotiating.

The disclosures, many of which previously haven't been reported, are part of a draft initial public offering prospectus viewed by The Wall Street Journal that revealed the company's financials for the first half of the year. Anthropic declined to comment.

The artificial intelligence giant said in the draft prospectus it recorded a net loss of more than $80 billion in the first half of this year, a total that largely reflects an accounting adjustment related to financing agreements.

That compares to a net loss of $13 billion during the same period a year earlier.

Anthropic laid out a sprawling list of risk factors, including uncertainty over how it will prevent its AI models from causing harm and protect itself from those liabilities, from sophisticated cyberattacks to possible blackmail by uncontrolled models.

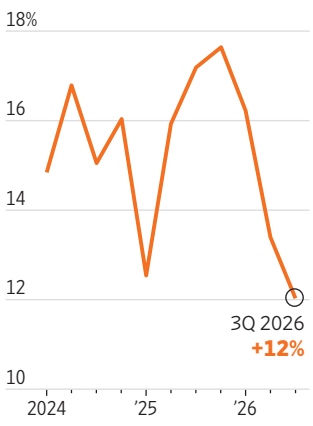

The San Francisco company is preparing for a blockbuster IPO that could help it reach a valuation of $2 trillion. The filing reveals a company growing at a blistering pace that

Kyndall Magyar is a game-show host, dance leader, party planner and problem solver

By Jacob Passy

GALVESTON, Texas—Carnival Cruise Line fans rework their itineraries to ensure they'll be on her ship. Onboard, she can hardly walk a few feet without getting stopped for a hug or selfie. Several hundred thousand social-media followers track her comings and goings.

Rocking the boat

You've probably never heard of Kyndall "Fire" Magyar. But for a certain segment of cruise enthusiasts, she's about as big as it gets.

As cruise director of the Carnival Jubilee, Magyar is the social engine of one of the world's largest cruise ships. She leads game shows and morning programs, kicks off deck parties and serves as the ship's main public-address announcer. In short, it's on her to make sure everyone on deck is always happy. Her days can start at dawn and end after midnight.

"Just make sure you like people and don't like sleep," Magyar advises aspiring directors.

Nurses Are In High Demand But Quit in Droves

Understaffing, abuse spark turnover

By Te-Ping Chen

Paige Campbell became a nurse during the pandemic, wanting to make a difference. She landed a job after college working in the emergency department at a Fort Walton Beach, Fla., hospital.

Since then, she's been kicked, spat on and shoved to the ground. Last year, after an emergency patient strangled her, she left for a role remotely monitoring patients. Front-line nurses are in high demand, but she needed a break.

"All I could think was, 'I can't breathe, I'm going to die here, and who's going to tell my mom and dad?'" Campbell, 33, said. The incident unfolded after an ER patient she'd offered a blanket to became aggressive.

America's nurses are more educated than ever and can command six-figure salaries. Most have their bachelor's degree. Their income has boomed since the pandemic to a median $97,550 a year, and their hands-on work isn't easily
