

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2025

US, Ukraine agree on plan for peace

OLEKSANDR GIMANOV/OLEKSANDR GIMANOV/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

ASSOCIATED PRESS

At top, a resident stood in a courtyard while a house burned on the outskirts of Odessa, Ukraine, on Tuesday. Above, an investigator examined a building near Moscow that was damaged by a downed Ukrainian drone.

Fear and resolve on campuses after arrest

Students wonder which colleges will be next

By Hilary Burns and
Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio
GLOBE STAFF

College students are starting to organize against the Trump administration after it detained a pro-Palestinian activist at Columbia University last weekend in New York City and put dozens of campuses on notice Monday that they could face sanctions for failing to crack down on antisemitism and the pro-Palestinian movement.

Foreign students and American students who have participated in pro-Palestinian activism described an environment of fear and uncertainty about which institutions and students might be targeted next.

“People are definitely afraid,” said Violet Barron, a junior at Harvard University and the founder of Jews for Palestine there.

Student organizers at the University of Massachusetts Amherst are planning a demonstration Thursday to protest the arrest of Mahmoud Khalil at Columbia, and to call on UMass administrators to protect at-risk students.

At Harvard, about 27 percent of students enrolled in the university in the 2024-2025 academic year are international.

Even before Khalil was detained, Barron said, organizers at Harvard had been discussing how to keep each other safe, holding some “Know Your Rights” sessions, and reaching out to international students individually.

“Columbia has laid bare something that is also true at Harvard, which is that our university administrations are not our protectors,” Barron said Monday. “So we have been thinking about ways to protect each other.”

On Tuesday, however, White House press secretary Karoline Leavitt accused the administration of targeting students. STUDENTS, Page A7

30-day cease-fire proposed as military aid resumes; unclear if Russia will agree to deal

By Andrew E. Kramer and Alan Rappeport
NEW YORK TIMES

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia — Ukraine said it would support a Trump administration proposal for a 30-day cease-fire with Russia, an announcement that followed hours of meetings Tuesday in Saudi Arabia where the United States agreed to immediately lift a pause on intelligence sharing with Ukraine and resume military assistance to the nation.

The talks in the coastal city of Jeddah brought new momentum to cease-fire negotiations that had faltered after a public confrontation at the White House between the Ukrainian and US presidents.

The Trump administration had suspended all military aid and intelligence sharing in the aftermath of that combative meeting in Washington.

The announcements Tuesday, in a joint statement, came hours after Russian officials said Ukrainian drones had targeted Moscow in the largest attack of the war on the Russian capital.

In the statement, the United States and Ukraine acknowledged that the terms of any cease-fire would be subject to UKRAINE, Page A4

‘It’s just navigating a constant balance of being cautious, while also not letting them scare us into submission.’

VIOLET BARRON,
founder of Jews for Palestine at Harvard

Tariff flip-flop

President Trump said he was ordering a double levy for Canadian steel and aluminum, then took it back after Wall Street convulsed. A2.

Shutdown vote

The House passed legislation that would fund federal agencies through September. A2.

Trans ban hits home for member of N.H. Guard

By Steven Porter
GLOBE STAFF

Knowing she would soon be forced to cut her hair, Nathalie L. Richter wore it down last week, allowing her light-brown locks to frame her face and brush the top of her collar.

Richter, 39, a captain in the New Hampshire Air National Guard, had secured an exception to the military grooming standards that apply to males, allowing her to grow out her hair. But now, as President Trump seeks to purge transgender people from the armed forces, her exception is no longer permitted.

Richter has also been facing pressure from state officials in New Hampshire, who have delayed her pending promotion without explanation.

Despite receiving a recommendation to elevate Richter’s rank to major, the four Republicans on the state’s five-member Executive Council — an elected body that counterbalances the governor’s power — tabled her promotion last month without discussion. TRANSGENDER, Page A7

SJC gives Mass. gun laws a boost

Visitors must be licensed here to carry arms in state

By Anjali Huynh
GLOBE STAFF

Massachusetts’ highest court said Tuesday that the state’s strict new gun laws do apply to out-of-state residents who bring in firearms they can legally possess back home.

The ruling came in two cases the Supreme Judicial Court heard last year involving gun owners from New Hampshire who were charged for unlawfully possessing firearms in Massachusetts without proper permits.

The cases further challenged Massachusetts’ authority to enforce licensing requirements after the US Supreme Court’s Bruen decision in 2022 sharply limited government’s power to regulate firearms. The Massachusetts cases drew national attention from Second Amendment and gun-violence-prevention groups alike over whether the state, which prides itself on low gun-violence rates, could impose strict restrictions on out-of-state residents without violating the Constitution.

The SJC threw out the unlawful possession case against one defendant because he was charged in 2021, before the Bruen decision. SJC, Page A5

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF/FILE 2023

“I’ve been blessed with a great spouse and wonderful kids and a great life. So I didn’t become president, but that’s the way it goes.”

At 91, Dukakis looks back with pride

By Brian MacQuarrie
GLOBE STAFF

BROOKLINE — Late-winter sunlight slanted through the second-floor windows of the set-back home where former governor Michael Dukakis and his wife, Kitty, have lived for 60 years. He apologized for not rising to meet a guest, extending a hand and flashing a warm, broad smile beneath a full head of thick, gray hair.

“I’m sorry for not being a little more welcoming,” Dukakis said in a strong, genial voice. But at 91 years old, some days are better than others, he added with a what-can-you-do shrug.

The same can be said of the country, he said, as the effects of President Trump’s opening policy salvos — budget cuts, steep tariffs, strained alliances — ricochet around the nation and the world. “I think that Massachusetts will be OK, but the rest of the country . . .” Dukakis said, his voice trailing off mid-sentence.

He no longer moves as easily, is recovering from a minor medical procedure, and his political battles are a memory. But a visit on a recent afternoon found Dukakis — state representative, three-term Massachusetts governor — looking back with pride. DUKAKIS, Page A5

The Everett City Council voted “no confidence” in Mayor Carlo DeMaria and wants his “bonuses” paid back. B1.

Loved and hated, the Pit at Harvard

VOL. 307, NO. 71

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

Square was finally demolished. B1.

Three former top executives at a Massachusetts medical device company pleaded guilty to fraud charges. B5.

What goes up

Wednesday: Cooling off. High 45-50.

Thursday: Mostly cloudy, chilly. High 38-43.

High tide: 11:02 a.m., 11:31 p.m.

Sunrise: 7:01 a.m. Sunset: 6:47 p.m.

Weather, Comics, G6-7. Obituaries, C9.

JONATHAN WIGGS/GLOBE STAFF

New places to celebrate for St. Patrick’s

Food writer Devra First tries out McGonagle’s Irish Pub & Restaurant (at left, Frank Brady took a drink) in Dorchester and Sweeney’s on Boylston in Back Bay. G1.

