

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, MAY 27, 2025

Dairy doubts: ‘Who’s going to milk the cows?’

More deportations of workers, more anxious questions from Vt. farmers

By Paul Heintz
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

SHELDON, Vt. — Dustin Machia was excited to vote for Donald Trump for president last year, in part because he pledged to crack down on illegal immigration. “We had a border problem,” Machia said. “We don’t want bad people in here. We don’t need the drugs and the gangbangers.”

But following high-profile deportations of migrant farmworkers in northern Vermont, Machia, a fifth-generation dairy farmer, said he feels misled.

“All the dairy farmers who voted for Trump were under the impression they weren’t going to come on farms and take our guys,” said Machia, 37. “It’s happening more than we’d like. It’s scaring the farming community and we’re like, ‘This wasn’t supposed to happen.’”

Farm owners and workers alike in this agricultural region near the Canadian border have been on edge in the month since US Border Patrol officers detained eight Mexican men on Vermont’s largest dairy operation, Pleasant Valley Farms, about 20 miles east of Machia’s barns. Two weeks before that, another Mexican national, Arbey Lopez-Lopez, was detained while bringing groceries to workers at Pleasant Valley, according to his attorney.

Four of the men have since been deported. Within the past month, immigration judges in Massachusetts have ordered two released on bond, including Lopez-Lopez. The

WORKERS, Page A7

PAUL HEINTZ FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Dustin Machia, co-owner of Machia & Sons Dairy in Sheldon, Vt., employs about 25 people year-round, including 11 migrants.

Russia once again intensifies air assault

Recent onslaught unlike any other against Ukraine

By Illia Novikov and Volodymyr Yurchuk
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KYIV — Russia launched its biggest drone attack against Ukraine overnight, a Ukrainian official said Monday, part of an escalating bombing campaign that has further dashed hopes for a breakthrough in efforts to end the 3-year-old war.

On the third-straight night of significant aerial bombardments, President Trump lashed out at Russian leader Vladimir Putin, saying he had gone “crazy” by stepping up attacks on Ukraine.

The expansion of Russia’s air campaign appeared to be another setback for US-led peace efforts, as Putin looks determined to capture more Ukrainian territory and inflict more damage. It comes after Kyiv accepted an unconditional 30-day cease-fire in March that was proposed by the United States but that Moscow effectively rejected.

This month alone, Russia has broken its record for aerial bombardments of Ukraine three times.

Russia is also still pushing along the roughly 620-mile front line, where it has made slow and costly progress, and is assembling its forces for a

UKRAINE, Page A6

MEMORIES AND MARCHERS

Joe Verlicco, a Navy veteran who served two tours in Vietnam, saluted as an American flag passed in the Quincy Memorial Day Parade and Ceremony on Monday. Participants included the American Legion Post 294 (right). Other local rallies and parades, B1. In Washington, D.C., the Vietnam Veterans Memorial continues to draw millions of visitors a year. A2.

PHOTOS BY BRETT PHELPS FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

ARI IACCARINO

Somerville resident Ari Iaccarino has spent two years documenting crashes he witnesses at Mystic Valley Parkway and Boston Avenue.

Photos help develop traffic safety picture

In Somerville, car collision chronicler drives changes

By Spencer Buell
GLOBE STAFF

SOMERVILLE — At any moment, but usually during the white-knuckle rush hour, Ari Iaccarino is prepared to hear the familiar crunch of metal on metal.

All it takes is another blown red light, or a reckless left turn, and some new combination of cars will skid, spin, smash at the busy crossroad at Somerville’s western edge, where Mystic Valley Parkway, also known as Route 16, meets Boston Avenue.

He sees it all right outside his window: A Prius,

INTERSECTION, Page A7

Deep in the delta, a menace lurks

Problems with sewage, lack of funds imperil health of poor community

By Claire Thornton
GLOBE STAFF

SHAW, Miss. — Alone and sitting in bed, Stephanie Smith read the medical test results that would change how she saw her small hometown in the Mississippi Delta, turning it from a quiet oasis into a health threat stalking her family.

Several months before, two anthropology professors tested adults and children in Shaw, Miss., for parasitic worms and bacteria that cause stomach and intestine problems. They chose Shaw for their research because of its high poverty rate, hot temperatures, and wet climate.

For years, Smith suffered mysterious bouts of abdominal pain and vomiting and worried about sanitation in Shaw, where the sewer lines are plagued by backups. She took her three children and herself to get tested.

That afternoon in her bedroom, while her kids were at school, Smith felt like she was the one in the classroom. Reading the notice that said she tested positive for a bacterial infection, she had the horrible feeling you experience when a teacher passes back a test you failed.

SEWAGE, Page A10

RORY DOYLE FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Stephanie Smith, with daughter, Olivia, at her home in Shaw, Miss.

Highs and glows

Tuesday: Sunny, beautiful.
High 72-77, low 56-61.

Wednesday: Sun, then rain late.
High 70-75, low 54-59.

Sunrise: 5:13. Sunset: 8:10.
Weather and comics, D4-5.
Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 147

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

The super PAC backing Josh Kraft is spending $1.4 million on ads, billboards, and text messages attacking Mayor Michelle Wu, marking the first significant infusion of outside cash into the mayoral race. B1.

King Charles was visiting Canada in a trip rich with symbolism given the rising tensions with the United States. A3.

The shutoff of hydro electricity from Canada to New England has nothing to do with a political power play and everything to do with a soft market, officials insisted. D1.

A dominating pitching performance was not enough to give Sox a win vs. the Brewers. C1.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com