

A powder keg in Minneapolis

JOSHUA LOTT/THE WASHINGTON POST

Federal agents remove a woman from a car Tuesday in Minneapolis after smashing her window, two blocks from where Renée Good was shot to death last week by an ICE officer, setting off days of flared tensions and heated confrontations.

Prosecutors in Minn., D.C. exit after ICE shooting

BY PERRY STEIN

Multiple senior prosecutors in Washington and Minnesota are leaving their jobs amid turmoil over the Trump administration's handling of the shooting death of a Minneapolis woman. The departures include at least five prosecutors from the U.S. attorney's office in Minneapolis, including the office's second-in-command, according to emails

U.S. attorney's office was pressured to investigate Renée Good's widow obtained by The Washington Post and people familiar with the matter. The Minnesota resignations followed demands by Justice Department leaders to investigate the widow of Renée Good, the 37-year-old woman killed last week by an Immigration and Customs Enforcement officer who shot into her car, according to two people familiar with the resignations who spoke on the condition of anonymity out of concern for retaliation. Good's wife was protesting ICE officers in the moments before the shooting. Prosecutors also were dismayed over the decision by federal officials to exclude state and local authorities from the investigation, one of the people said. Five senior prosecutors in the criminal section of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division also said they are leaving, according to four people familiar with the personnel moves who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss personnel

SEE PROSECUTORS ON A4

Report: Net migration negative last year

Drop-off, attributed to Trump policies, would mark a five-decade first

BY LAUREN KAORI GURLEY AND JAVIER ZARRACINA

For the first time in at least half a century, more immigrants left the United States than entered last year, according to new estimates released Tuesday by economists at the Brookings Institution. Net migration to the U.S. was between negative 10,000 and negative 295,000 in 2025, according to an update of estimates first released in the summer by economists Wendy Edelberg and Tara Watson, of center-left think tank Brookings, and Stan Veuger, of the conservative American Enterprise Institute. While arrests and deportations by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement have been in the spotlight, the report's authors attribute the majority of the drop-off in immigration to a slowdown in new arrivals orchestrated by President Donald Trump's administration — from the near-closure of the U.S.-Mexico border to new visa restrictions and fees and the end of many

SEE MIGRATION ON A18

SARAH L. VOISIN/THE WASHINGTON POST

High court signals doubts about challenges to trans athlete bans

A demonstrator waves a transgender flag outside the Supreme Court on Tuesday. Demonstrations for and against transgender athletes in sports took place as justices heard arguments on whether state bans in Idaho and West Virginia violate the Constitution's equal protection clause. Story, A3

Au pair testifies, says Virginia man stabbed wife and framed stranger

BY EMMA UBER

A stranger with a knife had pinned Christine Banfield down in the bedroom of her suburban Virginia home when her husband and their au pair burst through the door. "Brendan, he has a knife!" Christine Banfield yelled to her husband, au pair Juliana Peres Magalhães testified Tuesday, telling her story publicly for the first time from the witness stand in a Fairfax County courtroom. She said she saw Brendan Banfield, a federal agent, draw his service weapon and shoot the man. Christine Banfield asked Magalhães to call for help, and she dialed 911. But Brendan Banfield signaled for her to hang up the phone, Magalhães said, then seized the man's knife and began repeatedly stabbing his wife in the neck. Magalhães told jurors that she and Banfield had plotted to kill his wife and the man they'd lured from a fetish website to frame as a

Trump hints at decision to help protesters in Iran

OFFICIALS MEET TO DISCUSS STRIKE OPTIONS

Some MAGA allies warn of risks with military action

BY ISAAC ARNSDORF, WARREN P. STROBEL AND TARA COPP

President Donald Trump signaled he would assist anti-government protesters in Iran as the White House convened top officials on Tuesday to weigh military options. The president indicated the time for negotiations with Tehran had passed, saying in a social media post Tuesday morning that he had "cancelled all meetings" with Iranian officials. But some political allies are warning against the dangers of entanglement in another overseas conflict and the domestic costs of abandoning the "America First" foreign policy Trump campaigned on. The arguments against a strike include the danger of an accident or failure as the U.S. military and spy services attempt more high-risk operations, as well as the possibility that the fall of the Iranian government could lead to a more militant regime or another failed state in the Middle East, according to former officials and people close to the White House who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe sensitive private conversations. At the same time, the people said, skeptics of a strike are hoping to avoid the open acrimony leading up to the U.S. bombing of Iran's nuclear sites in June, which stoked divisions in Trump's base over the wisdom of intervention in a Middle Eastern conflict and the meaning of his "America First" slogan. The National Security Council met Tuesday without Trump to prepare options for the president, SEE IRAN ON A12

Iran crackdown: Rights group says over 2,000 have been killed. A12

President slams Powell, says he'll be 'gone soon'

Economic speech comes as GOP faces midterm challenges on living costs

BY JACOB BOGAGE AND MICHAEL BIRNBAUM

DETROIT — President Donald Trump lashed out Tuesday at his enemies, including the Federal Reserve chair, in tone-setting remarks for the second year of his second term, touting economic and foreign-policy accomplishments that Republicans hope will preserve their majorities in Congress in the midterm elections.

In a speech to the Detroit Economic Club, Trump lambasted Fed Chair Jerome H. Powell but crowed, "That jerk will be gone soon." He announced plans to cut federal funds next month from cities that don't cooperate with immigration enforcement officials, though he did not elaborate on details. He threatened to strip citizenship from Somali immigrants in Minneapolis who are convicted of defrauding federal benefit programs — a move that may be illegal — and offered a falsehood-laden history lesson on the U.S.'s use of tariffs, as the Supreme Court weighs whether to allow Trump's import taxes to remain in place. SEE ECONOMY ON A18

White House sets sights on parkland for Garden of Heroes

BY DAN DIAMOND, JANAY KINGSBERRY AND RICK MAESE

President Donald Trump's administration is eyeing West Potomac Park in Washington as a potential site for his planned National Garden of American Heroes, according to two people who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss a sensitive decision. The prominent riverside area sits south of the National Mall near the memorials to President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. It was not clear which section of the park the White House is considering, but the southern tip of West Potomac Park — a short walk from the Jefferson Memorial — has largely been used for athletic fields. If the president were to seek use of those grounds to build his planned monument — a vast sculpture garden of 250 notable American figures — it probably would require an exemption under the Commemorative Works Act, the law restricting the use of space around some federal lands in Washington. Trump spoke about his interest in building the garden, which has been described as a "vast outdoor park," in an interview with the SEE GARDEN ON A7

IN THE NEWS

Front and center All eyes are on Maryland and Virginia amid a national redistricting campaign to give Democrats an edge. B13

Data centers Amid rising concerns about the facilities, President Donald Trump said he is pushing tech firms to "pay their own way." A day later, Microsoft unveiled an initiative. A18

THE NATION A U.S. plane used in a September boat strike was painted to look like a civilian craft. A4

Bill Clinton declined to appear before lawmakers for a deposition on Jeffrey Epstein. A4

THE WORLD Germany's nationalist AfD party is hoping to win control of a state government for the first time, which in turn could undermine the fragile coalition governing the country. A11

THE ECONOMY Price growth held firm in December, capping a year of persistent inflation, new federal data shows. A14

STYLE "Competence porn" television such as "The Pitt" and "Hijack" provides a satisfying escape from current events. B1

SPORTS Mike Tomlin is stepping down as Steelers coach after 19 seasons — none under .500 — and one Super Bowl win. B7

THE REGION Kenyan R. McDuffie, who spent over 13 years on the D.C. Council, has entered the competitive race for mayor. B13

OBITUARIES Scott Adams, the creator of the comic strip "Dilbert" who later faded from view after making racist remarks, died at 68. B16

FOOD If you find a Damp January more appealing than a dry one, try these low-alcohol wines. E1

BUSINESS NEWS.....	A14
COMICS.....	B4
OBITUARIES.....	B16
OPINION PAGES.....	A16
TELEVISION.....	B6
WORLD NEWS.....	A11

CONTENT © 2026
The Washington Post
Year 149, No. 54461

0 170628 21100 3