

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, APRIL 6, 2026

Trump sharpens threat to civilian targets

In profanity-laced message to Iran, he vows attacks on power grid, bridges unless Strait of Hormuz is opened

By David E. Sanger
and Thomas Fuller
NEW YORK TIMES

In a message that was stunning for its crude combativeness and profanity, President Trump on Easter morning renewed his threat to destroy Iranian electricity facilities and bridges unless Iran reopened the Strait of Hormuz.

“Tuesday will be Power Plant Day, and Bridge Day, all wrapped up in one, in Iran,” Trump wrote a little after 8 a.m. Eastern time Sunday. “Open the (expletive) Strait, you crazy bastards, or you’ll be living in Hell

— JUST WATCH. Praise be to Allah.”

The president sent the message just hours after he announced the recovery of a downed airman from the mountains in Iran on Saturday night, a high-risk operation that deprived Iran of the leverage of capturing an American prisoner of war.

After five weeks of war, Trump’s threat seemed to signal a more dangerous level of brinkmanship for the global economy. Destroying Iran’s power grid could also be catastrophic for Iran’s more than 90 million people, plunging the country into darkness.

Iran’s selective blockage of the Strait of Hormuz, the crucial gateway to Persian Gulf oil and gas, has already created shortages of jet fuel and sent global oil prices surging.

A spiraling cycle of attacks and retribution involving oil and gas facilities could worsen the global energy shock.

The cycle has already begun. On Saturday, the Israeli military struck Iran’s largest petrochemical complex in Mahshahr, in southwest Iran. Those strikes

WAR, Page A6

US ARMY/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

President Trump’s Easter morning post signaled a possible escalation of the war.

Fear for Lebanon

Lebanese Americans express anxiety over plight of their homeland. B1.

A harrowing rescue

The downed airman knew that both US and Iranian forces were racing to find him. A7.

City paid $12m to ex-inmate, settled suit

Boston murder conviction tossed after misconduct by detectives, prosecutors

By Niki Griswold

GLOBE STAFF

The city of Boston paid a $12 million settlement to a man who spent nearly 19 years in prison for a murder he said he did not commit, quietly agreeing to the enormous sum years after a judge threw out his conviction because of police and prosecutorial misconduct.

Shaun Jenkins filed a federal lawsuit against the city and several Boston police detectives in 2023 after documents showed the detectives had paid at least one key witness and prosecutors buried evidence that could have implicated another suspect.

The city agreed to pay $12 million to settle the case in October 2024, according to a copy of the settlement the Globe obtained through a public records request. The agreement was not publicly announced at the time and has not previously been reported.

“Shaun Jenkins spent nearly two decades imprisoned for a crime he did not commit because of extraordinary misconduct by the BPD,” Nick Brustin and Katie McCarthy, attorneys for Jenkins, said in a statement Thursday. “The City’s settlement demonstrates it knew it faced much greater

SETTLEMENT, Page A4

For ratepayers, an unequal jolt from utility bill

Pain much less with town-owned light plants

By Sabrina Shankman

GLOBE STAFF

Christine Moreau and Andrew Feland live just 10 miles from each other, but their household utility bills are worlds apart.

Moreau lives in Worcester and gets her electricity from two for-profit companies, a third-party energy supplier and National Grid. Her monthly bills have gotten so large, $400 one month, $600 the next, that she’s being threatened with shut-off notices.

Feland lives in West Boylston, which is serviced by a nonprofit, the town-owned municipal light plant. And despite using almost double the amount of electricity as Moreau because his house now has heat pumps, his last monthly bill was less than hers by about $100.

“It just doesn’t make any sense, how one area can be that low and then another area can be this high,” said Moreau, whose rate with her electric supplier is similar to what National Grid offers

BILLS, Page A10

VATICAN MEDIA/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

A PLEA FOR PEACE ON DAY OF HOPE

“Let those who have weapons lay them down. Let those who have the power to unleash wars choose peace,” Pope Leo XIV told the crowd at St. Peter’s Basilica in the Vatican in the first Easter message of his papacy. “Not a peace imposed by force, but through dialogue. Not with the desire to dominate others, but to encounter them.” A3.

At right, Delmy Monterroza, a 25-year member of Most Holy Redeemer Parish in Boston, prayed in the choir loft.

PAT GREENHOUSE/GLOBE STAFF

Flip plopping

Monday: Mix of sun, clouds. High 50-55, low 33-38.

Tuesday: A few showers, cooler. High 43-48, low 27-32.

Sunrise: 6:18. Sunset: 7:15.

Weather and comics, D4-5. Obituaries, C9.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 309, NO. 96

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

The liaison between state government and the state’s immigrant communities is back on her job after a contentious struggle with immigration officials over her status. B1.

UCLA women clobbered South Carolina for the first NCAA national title in their program’s history. C1.

Massachusetts hemp businesses fear for their future as new federal restrictions threaten to shut them down. D1.

Black veteran lawmakers are bucking the calls for generational change within the Democratic Party. A2.

The fatal police shooting of a man experiencing a mental health crisis near Northeastern University heightened safety concerns for some students. B1.

The Red Sox blew a 4-0 lead and lost to the Padres. D1.

‘Refuse to stop’: a creed for marathon, life

Doctor, 80, battles anemia, diabetes, cancer as he heads to starting line

By Claire Thornton

GLOBE STAFF

Severe hot flashes. Testosterone deficiency. Anemia. Type-2 diabetes.

Michael Holick has long battled many side effects as part of his cancer treatments. They won’t stop the 80-year-old doctor from running his third consecutive Boston Marathon this month.

Holick, who was diagnosed with stage III prostate cancer in 2021, is one of the oldest runners in this year’s race. Out of 30,000 runners, only 22 are 80 or older this year, with the oldest at 85, according to the Boston Athletic Association.

As a practicing endocrinologist who specializes in treating patients with hypermobile Ehlers-Danlos syndrome, Holick said he’s running in tribute to young people with the rare genetic disease, which wreaks havoc on the body’s connective tissues.

Distance running is also Holick’s strategy for strengthening his own body in hopes

RUNNER, Page A10

LANE TURNER/GLOBE STAFF

Michael Holick put on his shoes as he prepared for a training run from his home in Weston. He is set to run his third consecutive Boston Marathon.