

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2025

Feeling a chill at student newspapers

With universities under scrutiny, journalists weigh how to proceed

By Aidan Ryan
GLOBE STAFF

The Trump administration's crackdown on college protesters has presented student journalists with a dilemma that cuts against the very tenets of the profession they hope to join: Can they capture this divisive moment without either censoring their work or endangering the people they cover?

Student journalists had a brush with this question in the early days of the war in Gaza, when campus protesters lost job offers and had their private information shared widely. But the arrest and attempted deportation of Tufts University graduate student Rümeysa Öztürk, who coauthored an op-ed in the student newspaper critical of Israel, has put the issue before them in the starkest possible terms.

"I've been working here for over three decades, and these are times we have never seen before," said Mike Hiestand, senior legal counsel at the Student Press Law Center. "We've crossed a line with the situation at Tufts."

►Students across Mass. have had their visas revoked. B1.

Situated at the intersection of the Trump administration's targeting of higher education, immigration, and First Amendment rights, student journal-

STUDENT PAPERS, Page A7

39%

jump in requests at the Student Press Law Center from student media for legal and reporting advice compared to a year ago

Trump says he'll hold firm on tariffs

Markets are on track to open with sharp declines despite efforts to calm

By Adriana Gomez Licon
and Fatima Hussein

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — President Trump said Sunday that he won't back down on his sweeping tariffs on imports from most of the world unless countries even out their trade with the United States, digging in on his plans to implement the taxes that have sent financial markets reeling, raised fears of a recession, and upended the global trading system.

Speaking to reporters aboard Air Force One, Trump said he didn't want global markets to fall, but also that he wasn't concerned about the massive sell-off either, adding, "sometimes you have to take medicine to fix something."

His comments came as global financial markets appeared on track to continue sharp declines once trading resumes Monday, and after Trump's aides sought to soothe market concerns by saying more than 50 nations had reached out about launching negotiations to lift the tariffs.

"I spoke to a lot of leaders, European, Asian, from all over the world," Trump said. "They're dying to make a deal. And I said, we're not going to have deficits with your country. We're not going

TARIFFS, Page A6

MATTHEW J. LEE/GLOBE STAFF/FILE

In June 2020, protesters in Boston marked the eight minutes and 49 seconds George Floyd had a knee on his neck.

LESSONS PUSHED ASIDE

Mass. became a leader in bringing equity to health care. But now those efforts are under fire.

By Tiana Woodard
GLOBE STAFF

The coronavirus pandemic spotlighted health disparities in a way that few had seen before. Everyone seemed to be getting sick, but the severity and risk of death partly depended on race, gender, and location.

These disparate outcomes — coupled with the massive racial uprising following the murder of George Floyd in May 2020 — propelled Massachusetts to lead the country into a new era: The state became a hub for equitable health care research and policy.

But the survival of such work is in jeopardy under the second

CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF/FILE

Residents waited for assistance at La Colaborativa in Chelsea during the pandemic.

Trump administration, and some leaders here are concerned that the growing anti-DEI sentiment across the country will not only dismantle the progress made in recent years but also make them political targets.

"The silver lining of the pandemic is we figured out that we really can fix our policies to best help marginalized people," said Dr. Rita Hamad, director of the Social Policies for Health Equity Research Center at the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health, or SPHERE. "Despite the things that we learned, we're rolling all that back."

As the same racial disparities that drew countless health care reforms persist, the Trump ad-

HEALTH DISPARITIES, Page A7

Some choices at MGB come as a surprise

Abuse counselor and chaplains among those let go after assurances

By Jonathan Saltzman and Jessica Bartlett

GLOBE STAFF

When Mass General Brigham announced the most layoffs in its history in February, the health system's chief executive said the hundreds of job cuts would focus on managers and administrators, not employees who dealt directly with patients.

But Dr. Anne Klibanski's assurance to staff in a Feb. 10 email didn't prevent layoffs of some employees who worked closely with patients, often under trying circumstances.

They include six full-time chaplains — at least half of whom worked directly with patients and families facing health crises and end-of-life decisions. Also laid off: the director of domestic violence programs at Brigham and Women's Hospital who counseled patients who had survived human trafficking and other abuse; and an employee in Massachusetts General Hospital's Living Tobacco-

MGB, Page A10

Spring drip

Monday: Rainy, showers. High: 38-43. Low: 33-38.

Tuesday: Rain then sun. High: 42-47. Low: 29-34.

Sunrise: 6:16 Sunset: 7:17

Comics and Weather, D4-5.

Obituaries, C9.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 307, NO. 97

*

Suggested retail price $4.00

Robert F. Kennedy Jr., the nation's health secretary, attended the funeral of an 8-year-old Texas girl who died of measles amid an outbreak that has burned through the region. A2.

Philip W. Johnston, a longtime public servant, has died. He was fiercely devoted to human rights and social justice. B1.

Mass Audubon scored a court victory in its quest to turn an old Chelsea factory into a waterfront park. D1.

Israeli strikes in the Gaza Strip killed at least 32 people, including more than a dozen women and children, local health officials said. A4.

Independent auditors of the Canton Police Department defended the department's integrity, as they presented their findings on how the agency handled the Karen Read investigation. B1.

Top Democrat on ethics panel formed by his father's fall

By Tal Kopan
GLOBE STAFF

In the summer of 2017, Representative Mark DeSaulnier sat in an empty US Senate hearing room, contemplating how his life had been forever changed in that very space.

Nearly 50 years before in the same room, a self-identified Mafia informant testified to a Senate committee that Mark's father, Edward DeSaulnier, then a Superior Court judge and former Massachusetts state legislator, had accepted a bribe to arrange a lenient sentence in a fraud case. After subsequent investigations by the Globe's Spotlight team exposing other misdeeds, the elder DeSaulnier was disbarred and resigned in disgrace.

Earlier this year, the younger DeSaulnier, who represents California, became the top Democrat on the House Ethics Committee, making him responsible for investigating the actions of colleagues for potential corruption. He cited his dad's example as his motivation.

DESAYLNIER, Page A10

JOHN RAOUX/ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOOPING IT UP — Members of the UConn women's basketball team celebrated during the second half of the NCAA Finals against South Carolina Sunday. The Huskies won, 82-59, to take their 12th national championship. Azzi Fudd had 24 points, Sarah Strong added 24 points and 15 rebounds, and Paige Bueckers scored 17 points in her final game at UConn in the win. C1.