

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2025

ICE arrests pro-Palestinian activist

Former Columbia student, notable part of protest movement, is legal resident

By Eliza Shapiro and Stephanie Saul
NEW YORK TIMES

Federal immigration authorities have detained a well-known activist who played a major role in Columbia University's pro-Palestinian student movement last year, his lawyer said Sunday.

The arrest of the activist, a legal permanent resident of the United States, on Saturday was a significant escalation of President Trump's crackdown on what he has called antisemitic campus activity.

The activist, Mahmoud Khalil, is of Palestinian heritage and graduated in December with a master's degree from the university's school of international affairs, according to his LinkedIn. His lawyer, Amy Greer, confirmed that he was a green card holder and said the arrest would face a vigorous legal challenge.

"We will vigorously be pursuing Mahmoud's rights in court, and will continue our efforts to right this terrible and inexcusable — and calculated — wrong committed against him," Greer said in a statement. The arrest, she said, "follows the US government's open repression of student activism and political speech."

The Trump administration has made Columbia the first target of its push to punish what the president has deemed elite schools' failures to protect Jewish students during campus protests.

On Friday, the administration revealed it had canceled $400 million in grants and contracts to the uni-

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mahmoud Khalil was arrested.

School or University that allows illegal protests," Trump wrote. "Agitators
COLUMBIA STUDENT, Page A6

versity. In a post last week, Trump vowed to punish individual protesters his administration considered "agitators."

"All federal funding will STOP for any College,

Veterans, doctors brace for VA cuts

DOGE downsizing could severely affect N.E. centers

By Katie Johnston and Chris Serres
GLOBE STAFF

The massive downsizing planned by the Trump administration at the Department of Veterans Affairs could take a major toll on New England, which employs more than 20,000 people working to provide health care and conduct research on post-traumatic stress disorder and other ailments affecting veterans.

The VA announced ►President Trump declines to rule out recession this year. A2. cut more than 70,000 jobs Wednesday as part of the Department of Government Efficiency's cost-cutting measures, following news reports based on a leaked internal memo. The move has elicited outrage and anxiety among local VA employees and veterans who rely on the agency's services.

The VA is the federal government's largest employer, with roughly 470,000 people, including more than 8,700 in Massachusetts. More than a quarter of the VA's workforce is made up of veterans. The agency is seeking to reduce employment to 2019 staffing levels of approximately 398,000.

State staffing numbers, from the Office of Personnel Management, do not include contractors.
VETERANS, Page A7

Federal workers fret: Is shutdown the next blow?

As morale over layoffs plummets, fears soar

By Julian E.J. Sorapuru
GLOBE STAFF

Under normal circumstances, riding out a government shutdown without pay is one of the worst-case scenarios for a federal employee.

These are not normal circumstances. Since Donald Trump reclaimed the presidency, the federal government has transformed from one of the most steady employers in the country to one in constant flux.

About 30,000 federal employees have had their jobs cut, hundreds have been rehired, and more than 75,000 have accepted buyouts offered in an effort to shrink the federal bureaucracy under the guidance of Elon Musk's Department of Government Efficiency.

With the Friday deadline to continue funding the government creeping closer, the possibility of adding another, if somewhat familiar, burden onto the already flustered federal workforce looms large.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES, Page A7

PHOTOS BY JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

Doug Lane sat next to a portrait of his son Spencer at a celebration of life in Providence for Spencer and his mother, Christine.

In tragedy's relentless grip

He strives for way forward after plane crash kills wife, skating son

By Christopher Gavin
GLOBE STAFF

PROVIDENCE — Last season, Christine Conrad Lane had missed all the competitions.

Her son Spencer's skating ambitions had become in many ways the center of their family's lives, as he catapulted from novice to Olympic hopeful over the course of just two years, hurtling his way toward a slot in the coveted National Development Camp.

But last year, he made an unusual request: He only wanted his father, Doug Lane, to attend his competitions.

Spencer had performed poorly

LANE, Page A10

Spencer Lane was killed in the helicopter-jet collision in January.

Array of sun signs

Monday: Some sun. High 49-54, low 33-38.
Tuesday: More sun, breezy. High 56-61, low 39-44.
Sunrise: 7:04. Sunset: 6:45.
Weather and comics, D4-5.
Obituaries, C9.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 307, NO. 69

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

In the news

Everett Mayor Carlo DeMaria Jr. could face demands to surrender to the city more than the $180,000 he has been told to repay. B1.

Canada's Liberal Party voters overwhelmingly chose a central banker, Mark Carney, to replace Justin Trudeau as prime minister and to take on President Trump. A5.

The Trump administration tapped the former head of Boston's office of Immigration and Customs Enforcement to serve as acting director of the overall agency. B1.

Russian forces reportedly walked miles inside a gas pipeline to strike Ukrainian troops from the rear in Kursk. A4.

Women, while still facing hurdles, are expanding their roles in the local construction industry. C1.

Tariff tumult batters craft beer brewers

Disappearing markets, skyrocketing costs lead to financial hangovers

By Hiawatha Bray
GLOBE STAFF
and Paul Heintz
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

Feb. 3 was supposed to be a watershed day for Baxter Brewing Co., a craft beer maker in Lewiston, Maine. After years of trying to break into the Canadian market, its first shipment, 5,000 cans of blueberry ales and IPAs was finally bound to cross the border to thirsty new customers in New Brunswick.

"We were ecstatic," said Baxter president Jenn Lever. "For us, three pallets is nothing to turn your nose at."

But on the day the shipment was scheduled to leave Lewiston, the premier of New Brunswick ordered its provincial alcohol authority to cease importing American beer, wine, and liquor in response to 25 percent tariffs President Trump had proposed for Canadian imports.

Baxter's order was canceled, and while

BRETT PHELPS FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Shawn Nelson unloaded kegs at Baxter Brewing in Lewiston, Maine, last week.

Trump has now several times suspended aspects of his new tariffs, Lever worries the international ping-pong match may have doomed her market expansion.

"It's pretty clear that it's not coming back anytime soon," Lever said.

Over the last month, the United States' trade skirmish with Canada has rattled New England's craft beer industry, which

TARIFFS, Page A10