Global outcry as over 1,300 killed in four days of Syria clashes

US, UN CONDEMN MASSACRE; SYRIAN PRESIDENCY SETS UP PROBE TEAM

DAMASCUS

Syrian President Ahmad Al Sharaa called for national unity and peace yesterday, after more than 1,300 people were reportedly killed in coastal Syria in the worst clashes since the overthrow of Bashar Al Assad.

A seven-member "independent committee" had been formed to investigate events, the Syrian presidency said.

The violence erupted on Thursday between the new security forces and loyalists of the former government along the Mediterranean coast in the heartland of the Alawite minority to which Al Assad belonged. The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights war monitor has reported that 830 Alawite civilians were killed in Latakia and Tartus provinces.

US Secretary of State Marco Rubio yesterday condemned the "massacres" of minorities in Syria and demanded that the interim administration hold those responsible to account.

"Syria's interim authorities must hold the perpetrators of these massacres against Syria's minority communities accountable," Rubio said in a statement.

The United Nations yesterday said it was receiving "extremely disturbing" reports of entire families being killed in northwestern Syria and called for an immediate halt to the violence.

"The killing of civilians in coastal areas in northwest Syria must cease, immediately," UN rights chief Volker Turk said in a statement. Germany described reports of the massacre as "shocking". — AFP
