

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 2025

FOR SOME, A DAY TO GRIEVE

PHOTOS BY CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF

For more than 50 years there has been another side of Thanksgiving in Plymouth, and on Thursday more than 1,000 people gathered on Cole’s Hill to mark the National Day of Mourning and draw attention to the genocide and mistreatment of Native Americans and other Indigenous people across the world. At top, Sol Gonzalez sat on the edge of Plymouth Harbor during a water prayer, with the Mayflower II in the background. Above, a woman named Ashni played her drum, while Julio Whitewall of Springfield sat at Plymouth Rock during a prayer. B1.

Guard member dies after shooting

Trump targets immigrants who got asylum from Biden, and green card holders

By Hamed Aleaziz, Julian E. Barnes, Elian Peltier, and Thomas Gibbons-Neff
NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — The Trump administration said Thursday that it would scrutinize all immigrants granted asylum by the Biden administration, as well as green card holders from a raft of countries, a day after an Afghan man was accused of the gruesome shooting of two National Guard members on patrol near the White House. Later Thursday, one of the wounded Guard members, Sarah Beckstrom, 20, died a day after undergoing emergency surgery. “This is not the result we hoped for, but it is the result we all feared,” Governor Patrick Morrisey of West Virginia wrote on the social platform X. The suspect, Rahmanullah Lakanwal, 29, had been a fighter in a CIA-backed Afghan “partner force” in the southern province of Kandahar, a stronghold of the Taliban insurgency, the agency said. Like many thousands of Afghans who assisted in America’s two-decade war there, he was allowed to immigrate to the United States after its chaotic 2021 pullout from Afghanistan, and he settled with his wife and children in Washington state. Jeanine Pirro, the US attorney in Washington, SHOOTING, Page A8

Immigrants face another peril: crossing state lines

By Steven Porter
GLOBE STAFF

With the rollout of President Trump’s mass deportations agenda this year, some attorneys who represent immigrants in Massachusetts have taken to giving their clients a new piece of standard advice: Be careful about crossing state lines. Fernanda Marra Romeiro, an attorney with Celedon Law in Marlborough, said many immigrants have been stopped and detained in Northern New England, including people with valid work authorization who were shocked to be taken into custody while traveling to or from job sites in Maine and New Hampshire. These days, anyone who lacks full legal status — such as those who are seeking asylum after crossing the border without authorization — should steer clear of states where local police might call federal immigration authorities, Romeiro said. “That’s basically the warning that we’ve been giving our clients or prospect clients: to avoid driving in New Hampshire, avoid going to New Hampshire . . . because even if you’re a passenger, the motor vehicle that you’re in could get stopped,” she said. That’s exactly what happened on Oct. 6 to one NEW HAMPSHIRE, Page A8

Paying top dollar for a bargain

‘Cheapflation’ keeps prices high on the budget stuff

By Dana Gerber
GLOBE STAFF

Abby Cutrumbes misses being able to buy, as she puts it, “genuinely dirt-cheap wine.” She thinks wistfully of the days she picked up a bottle for under $10, or even less than $8. But the 27-year-old Lowell resident said she hasn’t seen price tags that low in a long time. These days, she said, her old-reliable budget brand has inched closer in price to the next price tier up, prompting her to either shell out around $17 for a slightly nicer vino — “I’m in for a penny, in for a pound, so to speak” she said — or just skip the boozy buy altogether. By now, shoppers are accustomed to sky-high prices at the grocery store — a byproduct of the notorious bout of inflation that followed the COVID-19 pandemic. But as Cutrumbes has found, that inflation wasn’t always distributed equally. At least for food retailers, inflation hit cheaper products harder than premium varieties of the same products, narrowing the gap CHEAPFLATION, Page A7

ADOBE

Trying to get Canadians to cross border is an uphill climb

Jay Peak in Vt. hopes ‘love and good snow’ will bring them back

By Paul Heintz
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

JAY, Vt. — Josh Zulick drove eight hours last week from his Pennsylvania home to the powder-packed slopes of Vermont’s northernmost ski mountain. “Just chasing the snow,” he said as he stepped into a pair of Salomons at the base of Jay Peak Resort. The lifts wouldn’t spin for another few days, but the resort’s Tramside parking lot was buzzing with people seeking to skin up the mountain and drop in to its famous glades. The sun was out, the wind was still, and a near-record 90 inches of snow had fallen before the season officially began.

PAUL HEINTZ FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Steve Wright, Jay’s president and general manager, is cautiously optimistic.

“It’s a perfect storm — in a good way,” Zulick said. In recent years at Jay Peak, it’s been a perfect storm in a bad way. After weathering the largest-known fraud scheme in the history of Vermont, the resort was hit harder by COVID-19 than its peers. Situated just miles from the northern border and less than two hours from Montreal, it typically draws half its visitors from Canada — until the pandemic closed the border for 19 months. And then came Donald Trump. After the president was elected to a second term, his aggressive rhetoric toward Canada — think “51st state” — and his stiff tariff regime incensed the ski area’s Canadian clientele. “All that sort of conspired to give people pause about how much they were going to commit to the US,” said JAY, Page A7

Russia is expecting an American delegation in Moscow to discuss the US proposal for a peace deal that President Vladimir Putin called a “basis for future agreements.” A4.

Former secretary of state John Kerry was knighted in England for his efforts tackling global warming. B1.

Thanksgiving is the biggest day of the year for high school football, so check out a round-up of the contests. C6-10.

The third installment of “Knives Out” is a movie to be thankful for, writes critic Odie Henderson. G1.

Buy, buy birdie

Friday: Windy and cool.
High 42-47. Low 31-36.

Saturday: More of the same.
High 40-45. Low 29-34.

High tide: 4:39 a.m., 4:51 p.m.
Sunrise: 6:50 Sunset: 4:13

Weather and Comics, G6-7.

VOL. 308, NO. 151

Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4