

Still hazy after his U.N. address Tuesday are President Donald Trump's funding plans for the body, which have many envoys in suspense.

Even without charges, DOJ can punish Trump foes

BY PERRY STEIN AND YVONNE WINGETT SANCHEZ

Top Justice Department official Ed Martin has met with prosecutors and investigators throughout the country in recent weeks as he seeks to move forward with mortgage fraud cases against Democratic foes of President Donald Trump.

Martin has conferred, for example, with the top federal prosecutor in Maryland about allegations against Sen. Adam Schiff (D-California), whom Trump allies accuse of wrongly claiming in a mortgage application that a home he purchased in that state was his primary residence.

Just being investigated can take steep tolls on finances and reputations

Prosecutors have struggled, however, to build viable cases against Schiff and other Trump opponents.

Erik S. Siebert, the U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia, resigned Friday under pressure from the White House after prosecutors in his office said evidence did not support bringing such charges against New York Attorney General Letitia James.

Those problems haven't de-tered the president, who publicly declared his targets "guilty as hell" and has insisted they be charged promptly.

"JUSTICE MUST BE SERVED. NOW," Trump wrote over the weekend in a social media post directed at Attorney General Pam Bondi.

Siebert's resignation — and increasing pressure on prosecutors in Maryland and other jurisdictions — underscores the

SEE INVESTIGATION ON A5

Airing protests large and small, Trump rakes U.N.

ASSAILS ITS CLIMATE, MIGRATION MISSIONS

Escalator dismay, conflict-resolution claim dot speech

BY MICHAEL BIRNBAUM, JOHN HUDSON AND ADAM TAYLOR

UNITED NATIONS — President Donald Trump on Tuesday called for fellow leaders to halt global migration and end the fight against climate change, taking aim at two of the United Nations' core issues as he sought to elevate his domestic agenda into a play-book the whole world should follow.

In an address from the biggest international stage, Trump took aim at the organization's priorities but said it had "tremendous potential." But the message he delivered in unusually stark terms at the annual gathering of world leaders rebuked the values of the organization that seeks to reduce suffering from global conflicts, famines and persecution and address climate change by reducing emissions and the burning of fossil fuels.

Trump has long sought to reduce immigration and abandon climate commitments inside U.S. borders but has spent less time advocating that other countries do the same thing. In the nearly hour-long speech Tuesday — nearly four times the official 15-minute time limit — he globalized those priorities, declaring that individual nations need to put their own interests ahead of a broader cooperative agenda.

"Immigration and the high cost of so-called green renewable energy is destroying a large part of the free world," Trump told leaders in the soaring U.N.'s General Assembly Hall. "Countries that cherish freedom are fading fast because of their policies on these two subjects. You need strong borders and traditional energy sources if you are going to be great again."

Trump took special aim at the leaders of wealthy European nations that have long been Washington's closest allies, many of whom are facing right-wing challengers who model themselves after the U.S. president.

SEE UNITED NATIONS ON A11

Ukraine can win back all its land, president says

BY MICHAEL BIRNBAUM AND MATT VISER

UNITED NATIONS — President Donald Trump sharply escalated his rhetoric toward Russia on Tuesday, declaring that he now believes Ukraine can reclaim the entirety of its invaded territory, calling Russia a "paper tiger" and expressing support for European countries' right to shoot down Russian warplanes should they again violate NATO airspace.

Trump has for years expressed empathy for Russian President Vladimir Putin even as he called for an end to the war, and Tuesday's comments amounted to his strongest public support yet for Kyiv. The remarks, which came on an afternoon that he met Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky on the sidelines of the U.N. General Assembly, went beyond what even many Ukrainian policymakers privately acknowledge is the likelihood that they will not regain full control of their territory anytime soon.

Trump now calls Russia a 'paper tiger' that could crumble with NATO help

Just a month ago, Trump rolled out the red carpet for Putin in a warm encounter in Anchorage — and he has spent the ensuing

SEE UKRAINE ON A10

Sanctions: U.S. bans Iranian diplomats from visiting Costco. A11

Claims on Tylenol met with confusion, skepticism

BY AKILAH JOHNSON AND SABRINA MALHI

President Donald Trump's warning to pregnant women to stop taking Tylenol based on a largely unproven link to autism sent ripples through communities of expectant mothers, parents of autistic children, and obstetricians and midwives after decades of relying on the routine medicine.

Some parents of autistic chil-

Trump's autism warning elicits responses from mothers, medical groups dren said they felt validated in their suspicions that outside forces contributed to their child's condition. Other women questioned their decision to take a medication they had been assured was safe to use while pregnant. After the president told pregnant women to "tough it out" when sick, some saw an example of men faulting women for decisions they make to try to keep themselves and their children healthy.

Major medical societies stood by their positions that it's premature to link acetaminophen, Tylenol's active ingredient, to autism and that the medication is safe to use in consultation with health care providers.

"Normally I would take stronger medication, but Tylenol was the only safe thing to take during pregnancy," said Pamela Matthews, whose 29-year-old son is autistic. She took Tylenol during her pregnancy when she had an abscessed tooth, and she said she found Trump's comments "deeply hurtful and offensive."

SEE TYLENOL ON A6

Vaccines: The president's growing attacks shock health leaders. A6

Robot umpires will join MLB for its 2026 season

Disputed pitches can be challenged by batters, pitchers and catchers

BY CHELSEA JANES

Robotic umpires are coming to Major League Baseball in 2026, the league announced Tuesday. They will arrive only partially, at least for now, in the form of a challenge system by which batters, pitchers and catchers can challenge ball and strike calls in real time.

Human umpires will still stand behind home plate. They will still call balls and strikes. But the automated part of the system will work like this:

Each team will start the game with two challenges. If a player wants to use one, he must tap his cap or helmet immediately after an umpire's call to signal a challenge. An animated graphic showing the result of the pitch will be shown on the video board in the ballpark and on the television broadcast. If a player's challenge is successful, his team retains the challenge. If the call stands, his team loses it. If a game goes to extra innings, each team will be awarded a new challenge if it does not have one remaining.

As pitch-tracking technology improved in recent years, "robo umps" in some form have long felt like an inevitability. MLB started testing automated balls and strikes (ABS) in minor league games in the Atlantic League as early as 2019 and the challenge system in the Florida State League starting in 2022. The challenge system was implemented in Class AAA games, one level below the majors, starting midway through last season. This year, it was tested during major league spring training games and at the All-Star Game.

Those tests did not leave players convinced that ABS technology was trustworthy enough for

SEE MLB ON A2

Will recycling nuclear waste work this time?

A bold claim by a few start-ups underpins the president's vision for more power plants

A physicist looks at a spent-fuel storage pool inside a nuclear power plant in Avila Beach, California.

BY EVAN HALPER

The Trump administration's plan to fast-track construction of new commercial nuclear reactors to address a power crunch around the country leans heavily on a small group of start-ups trumpeting a bold claim: that they can make almost all of these operations' radioactive waste disappear.

That effort is already underway, with a company called Oklo announcing this month that it will spend $1.7 billion to build an "Advanced Fuel Center" made up of shiny, futuristic buildings on a Tennessee plot where uranium was enriched for the Manhattan Project more than 80 years ago. The first phase of the development, to be completed in the next five to seven years, will use nascent recycling machinery to spin radioactive reactor waste into fresh, usable fuel for plants.

Industry and administration officials also plan to recycle into reactor fuel plutonium retrieved

SEE NUCLEAR ON A14

IN THE NEWS

Shutdown nears The president canceled talks with Democrats, saying their demands are "ridiculous," leaving no solution to keep the government open beyond Tuesday. A4

Massive workforce reductions Maryland has suffered the nation's worst federal job losses during the second Trump administration. B13

THE NATION

A man was found guilty of trying to kill Donald Trump while he was on his West Palm Beach golf course last year during a hearing in which the defendant attempted to stab himself. A12

THE WORLD

Syria is pursuing a security deal with Israel to defuse tensions along their border. A7
A former Philippine president was charged with crimes against humanity at The Hague. A9

THE ECONOMY

The new tax break for tips won't solve our tipping problem and could be messy to compute, a columnist writes. A13
Forthcoming changes that will curb borrowing in a federal student loan program are upending the plans of families across the country. A14

STYLE

At New York Fashion Week shows, artificial intelligence has a real presence. B1

SPORTS

Spencer Carbery, the coach of the Capitals, has an insatiable curiosity that led him to Commanders training camp last month. B7

THE REGION

A protest statue depicting the friendship of President Donald Trump and Jeffrey Epstein appeared on the National Mall. B13

FOOD

These globally inspired dishes offer tasty ways to cut down on food waste in your home. E1

BUSINESS NEWS.....	A13
COMICS.....	B4
OBITUARIES.....	B17
OPINION PAGES.....	A15
TELEVISION.....	B6
WORLD NEWS.....	A7

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54349

